

Support the CPML in its third year of struggle

This month marks the second anniversary of the Communist Party Marxist-Leninist (CPML). While the party isn't holding large-scale celebrations this year, due to many more pressing tasks, this happy occasion is a time for all of us to work even harder to support the revolutionary cause.

The CPML has made significant gains in its first two years of existence. It has successfully developed as a Marxist-Leninist organization, training cadres throughout the country and planting itself firmly on its feet. The CPML has also begun to play an important role in linking itself with the mass movements of the working class and the oppressed peoples. The Party has contributed to the various united front movements and to the struggle for furthering Marxist-Leninist unity and bringing the leading revolutionaries into one organization.

There are still many tasks left unfinished and many new ones ahead. The next period must be one of transforming our young Party along with the growing new revolutionary movement into a mass party of the working class which can play a dynamic role in the days to come.

We call on our readers to increase their support for the CPML and its work. One of the most important ways this support can be shown is through a new fundraising campaign. Thousands of dollars are needed to support Party organizers working under difficult conditions from the Mississippi Delta to the lettuce fields of California.

No, there will be no big celebrations this year. But those of us who support the Party's work can do something to express our feelings. Checks can be sent through The Call, Box 5597, Chicago, Ill. 60680.
