NEVER MIND WESTLAND

WHAT ABOUT THE

WASTELAND

If you were someone who sat and watched the recent uproar that was caused by the "Westland affair" and found yourself wondering what the hell all the fuss was about, then don't worry. There are a lot more like you than you think. In fact the only thing that can be said for certain about the whole affair is that never has there been so much fuss, over something that meant so little to so many.

CONSEQUENCES

Whether or not a helicopter firm in Yeovil should be taken over by one lot of business men from Europe, or another lot from America is of little consequence to most working class people, and why should it be. It was never going to have much effect on their lives was it?

Yet day after day, there it was, overshadowing all other news for what seemed like weeks.

"Ah yes" we were told, the significance of the Westland affair lay in the fact that politicians were lying.

But where is the great significance in that. Politicians are always lying and everybody knows it. Try and find one person who honestly believes that politicians don't lie. You would have a hard job.

Whether it was just Leon Brittan who was lying, whether it was Margaret Thatcher, or whether as is more likely they were all up to their necks in it is irrelevant.

They have all lied to us about things far more important than Westland Helicopters.

RIDICULOUS

It's all completely ridiculous. Unemployment can rise to four million, the National Health Service can be slashed to the bone hospitals closing nearly every week, Police forces arming themselves with plastic bullets, and there's hardly a peep.

But a government minister leaks a letter, the contents of which mean the square root of fuck-all to ninety nine percent of the population and suddenly it's nothing but crisis and the possible fall of the government.

THE SQUABBLING INSIDE PARLIAMENT WILL HAVE LITTLE EFFECT ON THE LIVES OF THESE PEOPLE

The only conclusions that you can draw from the over-reaction of the establishment to the whole affair, is that they don't mind the politicians lying to us, but it is a different matter when they start doing it to their own crowd.

We should also remember that the whole affair only came to light because of the incompetence of those involved, and not because the Parliamentary system is designed to expose these abuses of authority.

PURPOSE

If the Westland Affair had any useful purpose at all, it was to underline once again the massive gap that exists between the working class people of this country, and those that run it.

It served to show once again what little relevance what happens in Parliament has to the lives of most of us.

Whether or not individual or whole governments fall over such issues, the unemployed and lowly paid will still have to eke out a living. Sick people will still die whilst hospitals are closed down, and old people will still freeze in winter because they can't afford to keep themselves warm.

The only way that those things will ever be changed is when the working class finally gets its act together and kicks the whole lot of them out.

Sick Joke

One of the great myths that Tories and other supporters of the capitalist system are always trying to impress on people, is that privatisation equals efficiency. Privately run firms always operate more efficiently and cheaply than nationalised ones they say, because they have an owner who has a vested interest in seeing that they do so.

PROFIT

This reasoning has been used to justify the selling off of several of the largest publically owned companies. It may well sound logical enough, but like most Tory ideas, you find that when you look a bit more closely, you find that the main effect of it is not so much greater efficiency, as greater profit.

A very good example of this is shown in the case of Hopefield Hospital, in Portrush Northern Ireland. Three years ago the hospital closed down after a campaign by local residents to keep it open failed. Then last year, a private nursing home opened on the same site. The opening of this was assisted by an EIGHTY THOUSAND POUND government grant.

COST

The cost for patients in this nursing home is some two hundred pounds a week. Several of those in the home, are on supplementary benefit. The D.H.S.S. pays all but twenty five pounds of the cost. In other words the cost for running the hospital is coming out of public money, just as it would have if the hospital had been running under the National Health Service.

The difference of course where as under the N.H.S. the cost to the public would have been just the economic cost it now has to pay for that plus whatever the owners of the home add on for their own profit. This profit is of course on top of the eighty thousand grant that they got in the first place.

The reason that they got this grant - from the department of trade and industry, was because by opening the home they created thirty jobs in Portrush. This is the same number of jobs that were lost when the place closed. In other words we can say that because of the greater efficiency of the privatisation of Hopefield Hospital, eighty thousand pounds of taxpayers money has been spent buying back thirty jobs that already existed, to run the same hospital at extra cost.

Lockout

The last twelve months have seen events in South Africa as one of the biggest news stories the world over. The brave fight of black S. African people against the might of the brutal regime of apartheid has moved observers the world over. From all quarters people have rushed to proclaim their solidarity.

And yet in the middle of all of this, one of the finest and most significant acts of solidarity with black S. African people has been going on almost unnoticed.

Almost 18 months ago, a young woman working at "Dunnes" stores in Dublin, refused to handle a piece of S. African fruit. For this she was threatened with the sack. Immediately six of her colleagues walked out in sympathy with her, and they put a picket on the stores demanding the right of all workers to refuse to handle S. African produce.

The Irish Trades Union Congress has made loud noises in their support, but predictably, has done little in the way of organising concrete support for them.

Recently however, it seemed that something might be giving.

INVESTIGATE

The Irish government announced that it was to investigate the use of "prison labour" in the production of goods on sale in Irish stores.

Although this falls short of the strikers total demands, they have decided to suspend the pickets until the end of February, and see what the results of this enquiry are.

They stress that the strike is not over, and that if positive action is not forthcoming they will resume picketing.

EXAMPLE

Whatever results this enquiry may bring, there can be little doubt that it would never have even occurred were it not for the magnificent action of these women.

It is a shining example to workers the world over who claim to be against apartheid that there is something that you can do.

Or rather it would be if people knew about it. In a year when S. Africa has been such big news, it is strange that this story should have received such little coverage.

Why we wonder does the British media ignore them. Because they are Irish or because they are women? Or is it both?

ARTHUR SCARGILL EXPRESSING THE SOLIDARITY OF THE NUM WITH THE DUNNES STRIKERS

Victory

In the last issue of Red Action, we carried an article about a strike by seven building workers who were fighting the blacklist that operates against known militants working in the building industry. It is with the greatest of pleasure that we report in this issue that that strike has been won and all of the men re-instated. This is remarkable achievement for such a small number of men up against John Laings, one of the largest building employers in the country. It was achieved by the determination of the men to stick it out, picketing several Laing's sites in the London area and eventually bringing several of them to an almost complete standstill. At a time when it has become all too familiar to hear and read about working class people being hammered by the bosses, it is heartening to be reminded of what can be achieved with determination. Our congratulations to them.

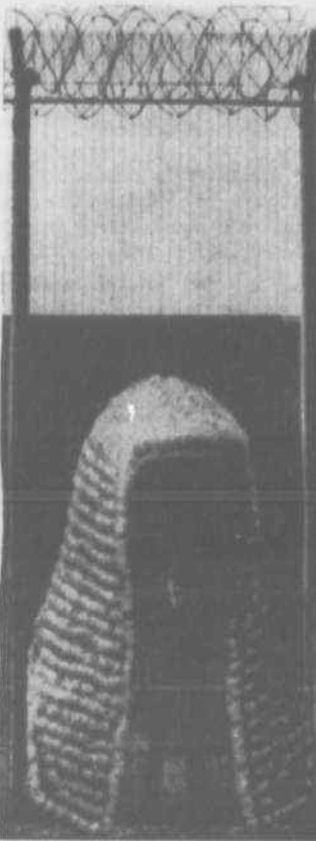

HYPOCRISY

FROM THE RIGHT

The British legal system is the best and fairest in the world. How often have we all heard that one? How often are we told how lucky we are in this country compared to those in countries like South Africa or Chile for instance, where the police seem to have the power to just lock up anyone that they want to for as long as they want. But that sort of thing couldn't over here could it?

A few weeks ago in Belfast, 28 men were convicted of various alleged "terrorist" offences, and sentenced to long terms of imprisonment ten of them for life. The only evidence against all of these men, were allegations made against them by one man who claimed to have been an accomplice during these offences.

There are now nearly 100 people serving long terms of imprisonment as a result of these "supergrass" trials. In all of them the only evidence against the accused has been the word of the "supergrass". There has been no other evidence produced to verify or support the allegations that they have made.

All of these "supergrasses" have been people who were either facing or already serving long terms of imprisonment themselves - Kirkpatrick was already serving five life sentences. All of them have been promised either early release or immunity from prosecution and large cash rewards, in return for their evidence against others.

Numerous people including many from the legal profession, have pointed out the highly unsatisfactory nature of evidence obtained in this way, especially when it is not backed up by evidence from any other source.

As they point out, the "supergrass" is a person himself in a dire predicament, who is now offered an avenue of escape. To be able to use it, he has to prove himself as useful to the authorities as possible. As one of them admitted whilst giving evidence, "my value will be judged by the amount of people that I put away".

How could anyone be sure that someone in this position - especially someone who by the laws own standards is someone of already proven bad character - with so much to lose or gain, would not be willing to make false accusations against people to improve the value of his evidence.

How can anyone be sure that the police are not supplying the names of anyone that they happen to want put away to the supergrass to put in the frame. Prison records show that Kirkpatrick receive over ONE HUNDRED visits from the police.

If he had been merely telling them his true story, would it have took that long?

It is impossible to be sure about any of these things unless the claims of the supergrass are backed up by other evidence from other sources, and yet as we have seen supergrass evidence is accepted without this backup

MURDER

This has led in some cases to the defendant being in a position where it is almost impossible to defend yourself

For example in one of the trials the "supergrass" named several men with whom he alleged he had planned the shooting of a policeman. They were charged with conspiracy to murder. The murder attempt itself he said, never actually took place. So there was no evidence there. When further questioned as to when this planning had actually taken place, he replied that he couldn't remember exactly. It was some time early on in the year four years ago.

How can anyone possibly defend themselves from such an allegation. Who, guilty or innocent could supply an alibi to prove what they had been doing during the early part of the year four years ago.

It sounds like something out of a script for a Marx Brother's film. Until you remember that there are people serving life imprisonment on the basis of that sort of evidence.

ACQUIT

Defenders of the system, point to the fact that some of the trials have collapsed with the defendants being acquitted, as evidence that there is an element of justice about them.

However this only happens when the "supergrass" is so obviously lying that the judge is forced to acquit to maintain some semblance of justice.

Even when this happens, in many cases the defendants are just re-arrested and charged with exactly the same offences, on the word of a different "supergrass".

STRUGGLE

So the police still eventually get the ones that they want, whilst the acquittals lend an air of respectability to the whole process.

Of course some of those that have been convicted in the trials have been people involved in the armed struggle. But it is equally as certain that others have been innocent.

IT IS AGAINST THIS UNDENIABLE FACT THAT ANY SORT OF JUSTIFICATION WHATSOEVER FOR THIS SYSTEM FALLS.

The reality of the supergrass system is quite simple. There are people who are either psychologically broken or who are corrupt enough to do anything to get out of the situation that they are in.

The police tell them exactly what to say, and use this method to imprison anyone that they happen to want, but against whom they have no evidence that would stand up in any court that had any semblance of operating in a just manner.

Included in this category are not only those suspected of being actively involved in the armed struggle, but also those involved in any form of political or social activity which the establishment doesn't approve of.

By encouraging and endorsing this system, the British legal system shows that in reality, it has no more sense of morality or justice than any of the many other systems which it looks down upon so disdainfully.

IT ALSO EXPLAINS VERY EASILY, WHY SO MANY IRISH PEOPLE HAVE MUCH MORE FAITH IN THE GUNS OF THE I.R.A. THAN THEY DO IN THE JUSTICE OF BRITAIN.

NUCLEAR ZONES

Nuclear weapons factories at Aldermaster and Burghfield near Reading are causing great concern to local people. A recent T.V. documentary highlighted problems of safety in such establishments. Studies also show a very high incidence of childhood cancer and Leukaemia in parts of this area.

Local people want a public enquiry to investigate these worrying discoveries. Their local Conservative M.P. was asked to support the call for such an enquiry but refused on the grounds that an official enquiry is already underway. However the study in question is funded by the National Radiological Protection Board and covers the whole country. It leaves much to be desired in its coverage of problems in small localities.

Meanwhile those people looking forward to greater protection from the dangers of the Nuclear Industries under a future Labour Government might be well advised to take note of what the Labour Shadow Environment Minister Jack Cunningham M.P. had to say about his party's new anti-nuclear policy.

MANIFESTO

In an interview with 'British Nuclear Fuels News' he said he did not expect the conference decision taken last October to be included in the next manifesto. The conference voted by a majority of one and a half million to halt the nuclear programme and close all existing plants. The motion was opposed by the Labour Party National Executive Committee and failed to get the two thirds majority required for automatic inclusion in Labour's programme. Large numbers of Labour Party activists expect the decision to be ignored. Cunningham described the conference decision as irrelevant and pointed out, quite correctly, that the Labour Party had supported nuclear power for decades.

Coincidentally the Shadow Ministers constituency contains BNFL's notorious Sellafield nuclear reprocessing plant which employs 10,000 people. His majority over the Conservative candidate at the last election was only 1,800. Isn't it reassuring to discover such principled politicians in the Labour Party Leadership.

SALARY

Of course the history of the Labour Party is a long list of radical conference decisions which are conveniently and quietly pushed aside when they are elected. Every new occurrence of this is just confirmation of the Party's inability to ever serve the working class. In any case no doubt a few kids dying of cancer means little to Mr Cunningham when set against a nice fat Cabinet salary.

By the way, anyone still doubting the dangers of nuclear power might be interested to hear that B.N.F.L.'s has agreed to pay compensation to workers at its plants who develop cancer which might have been caused by radiation. Until now they had to die before compensation was paid. So far they've paid out £200,000 in compensation to dead workers families. I don't know about you but I'd sooner try to earn a crust selling ice-cream in Greenland.

The immediacy of Ireland also brings home with vivid bluntness, many of the less romantic aspects of revolution. The bloodshed, suffering, imprisonment and death.

These are the realities that all true revolutionaries who through the ages have struggled against the old order to change the world for the better have had to face. There are many who's revolutionary commitment has been forged in the comfort safety and relative tranquility of post war Britain who cannot face up to this reality.

They instinctively pull back from the brutal reality of revolution when it is happening right in front of them, but afraid to admit this, even to themselves, come up with all their theories to try and turn their fear into virtue. To try and prove that it is they who are the "true revolutionaries" and not the Irish freedom fighters.

SCENE

It is difficult to try and imagine a scene more nauseating than that of a comfortable British lefty, who's own revolutionary activity probably extends to no more than attending a meeting of or selling some newspapers once a week, spouting on about his or her own revolutionary superiority to those who daily risk their lives in Ireland.

All they are really proving is that for them, commitment to the revolution ends where the real revolution starts

The war in Ireland is one of the most significant events occurring in the world today, although you would hardly think so they way so much of what goes on there is largely ignored in this country. This should not surprise us too much as the British establishment has every reason to try and conceal what is happening there. What is perhaps a bit surprising is the fact that many people who consider themselves to be on the far left of politics in this country also seem to pay little attention to what is happening there.

Traditionally, the British far left has always been very quick to loudly champion the cause of armed revolutionary movements around the world, such as the Viet Cong back in the sixties, or the Palestine Liberation Organisation or Black South African guerrillas today. And quite right as well.

SUPPORT

Yet many of these people so quick to proclaim their total support for revolutionary movements the world over, are much more reticent about showing the same sort of support for the revolutionary movement just a few hundred miles away in Ireland.

Obviously revolutionaries from one country should support all others everywhere, but when one is so near to your own country and as in this case, fighting against your own reactionary government, then you would surely expect the enthusiasm of support to be if anything, higher.

THEORIES

And yet this is quite obviously not the case. Why should this be so?

It is they tell us, because the armed Republican Movement is not a truly revolutionary socialist movement, and they have several different theories which supposedly prove this so.

There is the one which says that the Republican Movement is a class alliance led by the middle class. There is the one about them being an elitist terrorist movement which has rejected mass action. You may even get to hear the one which tells you that the IRA are "Green Fascists".

All of these theories, as expounded by British lefties have one thing in common. They all seek to show that to be a "true revolutionary" you cannot give your full support to the IRA/INLA.

It is not necessary for us to try and disprove these theories in order to show the real motives behind those that use them to justify their lack of support for the Republican Movement.

It is enough to point out that the criticisms that they make could just as easily apply to those other revolutionary movements that they so loudly and lovingly champion, for it to be obvious that they are used in the case of Ireland to conceal other motives.

The real difference in the case of Ireland is it's immediacy. It is the easiest thing in the world to give your unconditional support to a revolutionary movement which is fighting on the other side of the world. You will never be called upon to prove your commitment in any way. It doesn't have any effect on your life.

This is not so in the case of Ireland. Even to do no more than just proclaim your support for the IRA/INLA in this country will earn you the hostility of neighbours and workmates etc. It may well lead to more drastic consequences such as police harassment and possible arrest.

SANDANISTA AND IRA SOLDIERS BOTH REVOLUTIONARY FREEDOM FIGHTERS IN THE SAME TRADITION

THROUGH THE POST

Within the 'radical' left today, it is a popular thing to be interested in the cultures of people in confrontation with the British State. The most obvious examples are the Black Youth and the Irish, but to a lesser degree, Welsh and Scottish republican socialists are getting their voices heard, and quite rightly too.

However, it seems all too easy to forget or to dismiss the white, English, working class Youth. The trendy, mainly middle-class lefties, tend to regard us as either fascists or drunken football hooligans, irrelevant and totally uninterested in left-wing politics. White black youth get a, to my view, very patronising, pat on the head from the trendies they forget the involvement of young white workers in riots and confrontations with the Police. Thankfully, the black kids don't, and I know from my own experiences that the police aren't just racist. They hate everybody.

LUDDITES

I can though look to my own country's class struggle. From Watt Tylers Peasant rebellion, the Luddites and Tolpuddle Martyrs to more recent times with the Cable Street battles with the fascists. In fact there were loads of English workers in the Republicans International Brigade fighting fascists in Spain. The Miners strike too showed the insensitivity of the police and government to their country's workers.

Sure there are lots of bad things to be said against all this, and they're worth remembering. But also remember all the positive things too. Every blow struck against the British ruling class, by Irish, Scottish or Welsh republicans is to the advantage of the English working class, black or white. And it's this same English working class from which the final overthrow of Westminster and the upper classes will come.

As a young, British and white lad I express total support for any socialist fighting our own British Ruling Class because I can look to my own history of struggle against our compatriots in the ruling class. It's true to say the British state has probably the worst record of imperialist and capitalist oppression, its still there in Northern Ireland.

But even in England the working class lads have been shat on all the way. English working class lads have been swept up on a tide of patriotism and jingoism and slaughtered in their thousands in the interests of the ruling classes imperialist wars. It's a fair point to say they shouldn't have fought in the first place and I for one wouldn't. But it's easy to see the way the Media manipulate peoples ideas. The 1st World War recruitment and the Falklands 'Gotcha' are some of the best examples. Our lads were dying in large numbers in pits, factories and epidemics as little ago as the 40's and 50's, and though in not so large numbers today still are. It's not uncommon for O.A.P.'s to freeze to death in the 80's.

The pages of Red Action are open for any of our readers to air their views on any subject that they wish. Just write to us at the box number if there is anything you want to say.

THEFT

Since 1979 the sale of public assets has largely met the cost of record unemployment. Now, the flogging off of nationalised industries is set to finance tax-cuts which mainly benefit those sections of society which have already lined their pockets, thanks to this government.

British Gas and British Airports Authority will come up for sale in the next year or so. The Government has so far netted £5.2 billion from asset sales since 1979. In every case the asset was undervalued, which means that wealthy investors got valuable assets at knock-down prices - at our expense.

It's not only the parasites buying up shares who have benefited. The City institutions have charged fat fees for actually carrying out the privatisation programme. City firms picked up a cool £128m from the sale of British Telecom. TUC monitoring shows that the fees quoted in Parliament for these services provided by the City are always smaller than other authoritative estimates. On 15 sell-offs studied by the TUC there is a gap of £21.3m between the Government figures for City expenses and other authoritative estimates.

The TUC also looked at 18 companies which have acted as financial advisers or lead underwriters to the Government in these sales. No less than half of them donate money to the Conservative Party. All the way down the line people are lining their pockets from the sale of public assets. That is, all the way down until you reach the likes of you and me, because, of course, we're the unfortunate souls who are paying the price for all of this. And at the end of it all we're left with a service which costs more and isn't as good.

Another TUC study of all privatised companies showed, on average, that their top directors received an increase in salary of 34.2% (about £19,000) within one year of privatisation, and an increase of 85.1% (about £45,000) within two years. No wonder top executives of public corporations are so eager to co-operate with privatisation.

At the same time as these leeches swallow our money, the workers suffer the consequences of so called 'efficiency drives'. The National Communications Union shows that between 1965 and 1980 the safety record at British Telecommunications improved steadily. It has worsened since privatisation, and 1985 there were three deaths - the first since 1980. This falling safety record is a result of pressure to be more competitive. As well as these dangers to the health and safety of the workers, there are increased threats to their job security.

So much for giving these industries back to the people.

THE BOGEYMEN

The creation of "hate figures" is one of the crudest ways in which the mass circulation newspapers in Britain try and stop people from thinking. The most recent victim of this practice has been Derek Hatton, deputy leader of Liverpool City Council. We've been treated to a whole series of gory details about Councillor Hatton's lifestyle together with a whole lot of insults and abuse. He is just the latest target in a list which has included figures like Tony Benn and Ken Livingstone, and more recently Bernie Grant and Arthur Scargill.

They will tell you all sorts of things about socialists, trade union militants, peace campaigners, anti racists etc but rarely - if ever - answer any of the actual arguments. This absence of logical argument applies just as much to the press as well.

By smears, insults and in many cases complete lies, our supposedly "free press" seeks to teach people to hate anything or anyone considered to be left.

It's easy to test how successful they are in this contrick. Next time you meet someone who says that they "hate Arthur Scargill" (or whoever happens to be the popular bogeyman) ask them if they can give a single example of anything that Arthur Scargill (or whoever) has actually said, and with which they can logically disagree.

IN NEARLY EVERY CASE THEY WILL BE UNABLE TO GIVE YOU A SINGLE EXAMPLE, NEVER MIND A LOGICAL COUNTER ARGUMENT.

There are two reasons why the press uses this tactic. Firstly the millionaires who control ALL of the daily newspapers know that there are many people who will read something in the press, and as well as believing it to be true, will also adopt whatever is written as their own viewpoint. Secondly, turning left wing figures into bogeymen also serves to divert people's minds from the real political issues involved.

JUDGED

Now of course people such as Derek Hatton and Arthur Scargill are not right all of the time. But the important thing is that they should be judged on their political merits, and not on the basis of a hate campaign stirred up by the press.

But then Fleet Street newspapers gave up dealing with real news a long time ago. Whilst claiming to be the "voice of the people" the stories they contain are in fact highly selective and reflect the choice of a few millionaires as to what constitutes "news".

Their interests lay not in informing people but in making them support the establishment. The serious problems of the world caused by the capitalist system - the system which the newspaper bosses support - are put aside in favour of stories about the Royal family, pop stars or fictional soap operas.

BRAINWASH

It's all part of a process to brainwash people into thinking that there is actually nothing wrong with the world and that those who are trying to change things must be some sort of monsters.

However perhaps there are some signs that more people are beginning to wake up to it. The Sun is increasingly referred to as a comic, (what an insult to comics).

THE SOONER WORKING CLASS PEOPLE BEGIN TO SEE ALL OF THE CAPITALIST PRESS FOR WHAT IT IS, THE SOONER THEY CAN BEGIN TO THINK FOR THEMSELVES AND TAKE THE FIRST STEPS TOWARD CHANGING THINGS FOR ALL OF OUR BENEFIT.
