The International Working Class must Support the English Miners like One Man!

Appeal of the Executive Committee of the Communist International on the Fight of the English Miners.

The titanic social struggle in England is assuming a fresh intensified form. The working class of the whole world must with increased attention and increased solidarity, turn their eyes to the fight of the British Miners. The Delegate Conference of the Miners' Federation has brought to naught all the prophesies of the faint-hearted. It has by an overwhelming majority adopted fighting decisions which fling back in the most emphatic manner the insolent provocation of the Conservative Government, which not only wanted to reduce the miners' wages, but also to lengthen the working day and to force future trade unions struggles into the straight jacket of State arbitration. The Delegate Conference has adopted a resolution to intensify the struggle, to withdraw from all the mines all safety men, who up to now have safeguarded the inviolability of the sacred property of the mining capitalists. The Delegate Conference addressed a powerful appeal to the whole British Working Class and demanded the calling of a special Trades Union Congress.

Simultaneously with the challenge of the mining proletariat there was issued the challenge of the British bourgeoisie. The annual conference of the ruling Conservative Party at Scarborough was nothing else than one long outery against the rights and even against the existence of the Trade Unions. Its resolutions demanded that mass picketing be made illegal, that strikes shall only be called after a secret ballot has been held under the control of the government and that trade union under the control of the government and that trade union funds shall be placed under government control; the Conference also proclaimed that the State should defend the "liberty" of blacklegs.

The Delegate Conference of the Miners and the Party Conference of the Conservatives reveal the dramatic intensification of the social struggles in Great Britain. The Prime Minister Baldwin even declared at Scarborough that England now tresembles pre-war Europe, where two armed camps are facing one another and where tremendous conflicts are inevitable. The mining conflict has lasted for nearly six months? it is more and more clearly taking the form of a wide scale political strike. The Conservative Government is more and more identifying itself in the eyes of the broadest masses with the most reactionary elements of the bourgeoisie. The Millers reject the impudent demands of the government and proclaim unwintensified struggle. The government will reply to the withdrawar of the safety men by replacing them by soldiers and marries; the workers will be compelled to organise defence corps that is the prospect of the social struggles in Oreal Britain for the near hume.

The appeal of the Communist Party of Great Britain demands that the Conservative Government be turned out of office and that the present parliament be dissolved. It calls moon the broadest masses to set up a real Workers' Covernment under control of the proletariat, to demand the immediate intiomalisation of the mines without compensation, the introduction of workers' control and the organisation of an embargo. The slopens of the Communist, Party of Great Britain and of the Delegate Conference of the Miners are demands which accord with the Party; for the attention of all Communists is flow particularly Party; for the attention of an Communists is now particularly oncentrated on into distinct. The Party has now to fulfil extremely important tasks of the programinar revolution without Lenin's addeship, and moreover in extractionarily compute ated international and integral conditions. It is therefore of great upportance that we should study the teaching which Lenin bequeathed us, Leginism and the history of our Party. It will therefore not be arrise if I deal at length with those questions which have been sof the greatest amportance in the history of our Party and to which the present period is again imparting special importance. Our Party represents a gigantic organisation, which is powerfully rooted in the working class, which has vast experience of the revolutionary fight and no small experience of the practical construction of socialism. Our Party is the most important battation of international Communism as a whole and is at the present time the main pillar of the international proletarian reve lution. All this is possible because the Party is built up on an evential history and because, in every period of history, it has clearly seen what are the fundamental tasks of the proletariat

At its 14th Party Congress, the Party discussed with great concentration and from every point of view the tasks of the present period, the immediate tasks of socialist construction Since the Party Congress the leading functionaries of the Party have more than once occupied themselves with re-examining the resolutions passed at the Party Congress and with working them out in detail. There can be no doubt that the overwhelming major rity of the Party one might indeed say the whole Party (with a few exceptions) - holds firmfly to these resolutions, with real harmony and real unanimity. This is proved by the unanimous support given to the resolutions of the Plenum of the C. C. and of the C. C. C. in July.

Nevertheless ar apposition in the Party, a whole block of opposition to the Lemmst policy of the Party has been formed The opposition block includes remnants of former small opposition groups and has been sughtly replemented by the recent vacillating attitude of former disciples of Lenin, the so-called "new opposition". The existence of an opposition block which is now trying to increase its activities still more, is air unidentable fact. This block combines the opposition "currents" from Med vediev and Shijapnikov to Trotzky and Zinoviev under the obvious hegemony of Trotzkyism. Though the block has no clear programme, though it is not based on principles, though it has But few adherents, it can at least boast of a superfluity of former Party leaders. It is quite natural that the Party should concern itself with the question of what will be the fate of the opposition block.

From the History of the Party.

The "August Block"

This leads me to call your attention to one of the mos important moments in the past history of our Party, to that historical period when our Party definitely broke away from Menshevism (as such), thus finally crystallising into the Leninist Party. This period is of special importance because the crystall sation of Bolshevism as an independant Party took place in the midst of the fight against the famous "August Block", which was composed of fragments of a great variety of insignificant groups and tendencies, from the original Menshevists to the so-called "Wperjod". Trotzky took up his position in the centre and at the head of this block. I speak of the period 1912 - 1914.

What period was this? It was a period of the stormy detopment of the revolutionary labour movement, a period when Czarist reaction, which had raged for some years after 1905, wa compelled to beat a retreat in view of the powerful expansion the revolutionary activity of the proletariat. It was a period when he working class of Russia and above all its socialist vanguard was faced by vast new tasks, particularly by the task of the revolutionary fight and the overthrow of arbitrary rule. As we now see, it was a period which was decisive for the victory of he February revolution and which brought with it the crisis of Czarism and the crisis of the bourgeois-feudal State, owing to the powerful development of the labour movement. In those years the strike movement of the workers exceeded the high-water mark which it had reached in 1905. In those years, the storm of revolution cast its shadow before. The revolution, it is true, was postponed by the outbreak of the great war.

Between the revolutionary period 1905/06 and the new development in the years 1911/14 however lie the worst years of Czarist reaction. In those years, when reaction was celebrating orgies, there were many petty bourgeois revolutionaries, large numbers of "socialists" from the circles of the petty bourgeois intelligentsia who were not equal to the tasks of the new rise of the revolutionary spirit, who were dragged down by their social origin to sentimentality and to adapting themselves to the standards permitted by Czarism. Instead of being leaders in the revolutionary revival, the "revolutionaries" and "socialists" from petty bourgeois circles, especially from the circles of the petty bourgeois intelligentsia behaved as renegades and as traitors to the

In spite of defaitism and of the renegades from these circles, the Party of the Bolsheviki under Lenin's leadership held high the banner of revolution, and round this banner, the proletarians gathered in closer and closer ranks. During this period, our Party issued three chief bantle-slogans: Overthrow of the arbitrary rule, seizure of the land held under feudal tenure and the eight hours' day. These slogans or, as they were called in the legal Press of the day, the "three whales", were at that time the chief slogans of our Party.

The Mensheviki concealed the immost nature of their policy by their own slogan: Freedom of coalition, i. e. freedom for the labour organisations. The Mensheviki tried to inspire the workers with the illusion that it whould be possible, while maintaining Czarism, to achieve freedom for the proletarian organisations. Our Party applied an enormous amount of energy to enlightening the workers about this delusion, with the result that the great mass of the class-conscious workers realised that the Menshevist slogans meant nothing more nor less than a bourgeois-Liberal adaptation of the Mensheviki to the arbitrary rule of Czarism. In the end only quite insignificant little groups of workers remained in the camp of the Mensheviki Behind Bolshevism stood the picked troops of the proletariat on whom all depended, who decidedly condemned the "Liberal labour policy", as Lenin at that time dubbed this policy of the Mensheviki

The Mensheviki concealed the inmost nature of their policy under phrases about an alleged defence of the most urgent, immediate needs of the workers. With vicious wrath they attacked the Bolsheviki who, in their opinion, had stirred up the workers with impracticable, Utopian slogans. It was at that time our chief task to unmask the Liberal-bourgeois character of the Menshevist policy.

The Mensheviki however received support from persons who fried to decorate their policy with "Left" phrases and an outward show of radicalism. Amongst these was, at that time, Comrade Trotzky who tried to prove that the Menshevist slogan of "freedom of coalition" was a much more radical and much more revolutionary slogan than the Bolshevist "three whales". In those days Comrade Trotzky tried to speak with the unction of learned Marxism and to teach us that the Bolshevist programme of the "democratisation of the country" (i. e. of the overthrow of arbitrary rule) ranked lower than the Menshevist programme of "freedom of coalition." By the repetition of platitudes in the Nasche Sarja" (a Menshevist paper of those days), maintaining that the proletariat would have to fight for the freedom of organisation of the workers under any bourgeois power, i.e. ven after the overthrow of arbitrary rule, by these "Left" words, he concealed the bourgeois-Liberal character of the Menshevist programme, i. e. the slogan of freedom of coalition under the arbitrary rule of Czarism.

An attempt was then made to attack Lenin's Party from the rear. In 1911 the Mensheviki, under the leadership of Frotzky and Axelrod tried to unite their groups and grouplets and to emalgamate with the grouplets of the "Wperjod" people, who had fallen away from Bolshevism. This is the story of the origin of the August Block which, before the war, was lead by the Menshevist Liberals with the programme of freedom of coalition (organisation) for the workers - under the arbitrary rule of Czarism

The programme of the Bolsheviki, which I have quoted, was the programme of revolution, and this programme demanded a Party worthy of the chief tasks of the revolutionary epoch. This is why, in that period, the Bolsheviki had to carry on a particularly tough fight for the existence of the Party against the "Liberal Labour politicians" and their friends. It was one of the most important preconditions for the construction of a revolutionary Party of the proletariat, to advocate the necessity of an illegal party. With regard to this question, the Mensheviki revealed themselves as complete renegades from the revolution, as enemies of the revolutionary light. They did not tire of shouting, whenever an opportunity presented itself, that the Party was now nothing but a "corpse" and that the restoration of the illegal organisations of the Party was nothing but an "obnoxious and reactionary Utopia." For this reason they were called 'liquidators."

In that period we had to apply enormous energy to the work of constructing our illegal party organisations, but we applied an equal amount of energy to the work of developing the legal labour organisations and to consolidating our revolutionary positions, our Bolshevist leadership. This was the period in which we founded our "Pravda", which is now approaching its fifteenth anniversary. I should like to mention that we had to fight hard for the name "Pravda" (Truth). Probably many comrides are ignorant of the fact that it was just against Trotzey, the Menshevist liquidator of those days, that we had to defend the name "Pravda." Comrade Trotzky was then publishing a small paper in Vienna. He received the appearance of the Bolshevist newspaper "Pravda" in St. Petersburg, as it was then called, with the greatest hostility. He was of the opinion that the Leninist circle, that "embodiment of fractional reaction and of secessional obstinacy" had committed a quite special "fraud" by chosing the name "Pravda" for its organ. Shortly after the issue of the first number of our "Pravda", the editor received a letter from Comrade Trotzky, demanding that the title of "Pravda" be altered at once. Contrade Trotzky threatened that, if this were not done, he would call upon the 2nd International to pronounce verdict against our "Pravda". We explained to Comrade Frotzky that we had been obliged to adopt the name "Pravda" as the name of "Worker's Journal", originally fixed upon had already been taken by the Mensheviki, who had bought the right to publish a paper under this name from the competent official authority. We, of course, refused to comply with Comrade Trotzky's demand and pointed out that the name of the Yienna "Pravda" did not enjoy the least popularity among the working masses of Russia. Trotzky however was for the time being actually successful in his campaign against the St. Petersburg 'Pravda". Thus, Maxim Gorki who, at that time was in close touch with the Bolsheviki, sent us a letter, under the influence of Comrade Trotzky's agitation, in which he refused to collaborate in the "Pravda". Thus, at a period when the Party was fighting with tremendous efforts for its very existence, when with tremendous efforts, it had succeeded in publishing the first legal Bolshevist Labour paper, it had to defend itself not only against the direct reprisals of the authorities but also against the permanent agitation of the Menshevist liquidators with whom at that time Trotzky was hand in glove.

In the summer of 1912, when the Labour movement had already brought to light the existence of enormous revolutionary possibilities, when, supported by the revolutionary revival, legal Bolshevist paper had been issued, when our Party functionaries, under the leadership of the Bolshevist centre with Lenin at its head, had succeeded in once more consolidating the position of the illegal Party organisations, when the Party was becoming a more and more decisive and really leading force among the masses of workers, — at that time the Menshevist grouplets, fractions and literary circles proceeded to form the socalled "August Block". The "August Block" of the Member's the semi-Mensheviki and the ex-Bolsheviki who follows Trotzky's lead, declared war on our Party, on Lenin and on the "Pravda"

This block was permeated by ideas, which were most clearly expressed by its ideologist, the Menshevist Axelrod.

"Fractional union is an absolute duty of the adherents of Party reform or rather of party revolution." F 9996: 10 1 16 agitation of the Communists and of the revolutionary supporters of the Minority Movement, become the slogens of millions of the English Working Class.

The Working Class of Great Britain the Working Class of the whole world now has the day to histen like one man to the aid of the English Miners. The workers must bring to mainth the treacherous machinations of the Ceneral Council of maght the treacherous machinations of the General Council of the British Trades Union Congress. The pressure of the masses must put an end to the continued of the Miners' Federation. Enough of flirtation with the Bishops, of futile compromises for the sake of so called "subject opinion", which did not for a moment serve to mobilise public must pur air end to the continued vacillations of the Executive of the Miners' Federation. Enough of firstation with the Bishops, enough of futile compromises for the sake of so called "public opinion", which did not for a moment serve to mobilise public opinion, which did not for a moment serve to modifie public opinion in favour of the miners, but on the other hand involved the dan er of co-futing and demobilitying the heroic arrays of the Miners. The iden of the Labour Parts have for nearly six months attempted to sestroy the miners' first by daily stabs; now, however, mey proclaim their mention to "save" the miners' first every mey proclaim their mention to "save" the miners' fight by a platform campaign. Instead of organising the preven-tion of the fransport of coal by the railway workers and transport workers, they resort to brittle with words according to all the odious rules of parliamentary speech making lust as in Empland, the reformists are betraving the miners' struggle internationally. Amsterdam only exercises international true interests of the British proletariat. The overthrow of the solidarity insofar as it receives good interest in retupe. The re-formist leaders of the German Miners' Federation boast of the "good market conditions" in Germany, in other words of the export of blackleg coal to Great Britain. The Miners' International decided on September 10th to announce an international solidarity strike of the miners should the fight of the British miners not be ended by the 30th September. They ventured to make this decision because they reckoned on a speedy defeat of the struggle. But the English miners are still beroically continuing to hight, and the Miners' International has cowardly broken its own promise.

It is the duty of the international Working Class to settle accounts with the reformist leaders of the Miners'-International and the representatives of the minera in the various countries who prevented the international miners' strike and to support the demand of the English Miners for the calling of an international miners' strike (which is also in the interess of the miners and the workers of the other countries) by increasing by every means the mass pressure of the workers in all countries in this direction. The workers must clearly recognise however the long as hodges and this entering in leaders of the Miners' International the international miners' strike will the manners international the international finders such as the presented of the ransport to England of backler to and the imposition of a levy upon the working class in Europe and America on behalf of their fighting prothers, were sabotaged by them.

In spite of all prophecies of defeat of the entire press of the bourgeoisie, in spite of all the efforts of the reformists to create a deleatist mood, the fight in England is still going on. The English Miners can still gain the victory if the British working class and the international proletariat hasten to their revolution, i. e in layour of the destruction of the old and the foundation of a new Party.

What is the meaning of this liquidatory ideology? What was the ideological standpoint of the August Block? As early as 1910, not only the Bolsheviki but some of the Mensheviki pronounced against this liquidatory tendency, and the Bolsheviki pronounced against this liquidatory tendency, and the Bolsheviki pronounced against this liquidatory tendency, and the Bolsheviki held consistently to this judgment. At that sime even the Party had recognised that the liquidatorship was nothing but a "bourgeois influence over the proletariat". Lenin carried on an embittered fight against this liquidatorship. He said of it:

"If there were no liquidators the clever bourgeons progressives would be obliged to pick out or give splanted appointments to a lew intellectuals who would imbue the working class with these ideas.

Only a small proportion of the members of the August Block were intelligent enough to return to the revolutionary point of view, some of them indeed returned to our Party. On the other hand the August Block was, for some of those who participated in it, a bridge by which they found a direct path leading them over to the side of the bourgeoiste and even to the side of monarchism, as was the case with G. Alexansky, Lemis said, with regard to the liquidators who had united in the August Block; regard to the liquidators who had united in the August Block;

They are petty bourgeois intellectuals who were sent the nanks of the workers. The liquidators are traitors to Marxism, traitors to democracy?

In another place, Lenin pointed out that: Liquidatorship is the introduction of bourgeois ideas. of renunciation and renegency into the ranks of the prole-

the who studies the history of our Party must devote special attention to the period of the construction and development of our Party, in which it formed itself into an independent Bolshevist organisation, it the light against the August Block the Mensheviki, the semi-Mensheviki and a small handlin of ex-Mensheviki, the semi-Mensheviki and a small handler of ex-Bolsheviki. The fate of this block as the fate of the Menshevist Party which is now serving the international bourgeoisie, inter-national capitalism as far las its strength allows. Our Party on the other hand was steeled in the fight against the August Block and has grown into a powerful leader of the proleturian revo-

The Inner Party Situation 1904 a deffurt The Opposition Block Linemen & C. T.

I now pass to the questions of the present situation within the Party. The Party must now defend the Leninist point of view against the Opposition Block which is under the negemony of Trotzkyjam. What is the common platform on which Trotzky. Zinowiev, Kamenev and others who, until recently, were opposed Zinoviev, Kamenev and others who until recently, were opposed to one another are now united?

The characteristic feature of every political union of the petty bourgeoiste as the absence of any uniform and approximately straight political line, of a political platform. We now once those see this very situation within the present opposition Block.

There is however one point which now unites the former leaders and the remnants of the opposition grouplets of our Party. This point is the nadical change in the inner Party regime. This is the basis on which they all united, from Courade Medveliev to Comrades Trotzky, Zinoviev, Kamenevict.

What is the political significance of this main point in the programme of the Opposition Block? This point was expounded to the Party in the frankest and most consistent was expounded ousloned there is within the Party a regime which, in his clusions: there is within the Party a fegime which, in his customs; there is within the Party a paparatus and the opinion, is so abnormal, because the party apparatus and the proved, it e that our state is a proletarian dictatorship whereas in Ossovsky's opinion it is only a focurgeois-democratic) worm. Ossovsky opinion it is only a focurgeois-democratic) worm. Ossovsky opinion it is only a focurgeois-democratic) worm. Ossovsky opinion it is only a focurgeois-democratic.

Let us now recall the ideas of the August Block, Axelrod's ideas of a "Party revolution". In essentials Ossovsky echoes in ideas of a "Party revolution". In essentials Ossovsky echoes in a new situation and in new terms the old Axelrod ideas of the necessity of a necessity of freevolutionary, transformation of the internal regime of the necessity of a new feet of the recessity of a necessity of a necessity of a necessity of a necessity of the necessity of a necessity of the necessity of the necessity of the party regarded Ossovsky's ideas and showed as nothing but semi-Menshevist itourdatory ideas and showed on Ossovsky the door. In spits of this and in spite of the question to the Party let onitical attitude towards Ossovsky's exclusion from the Party let onitical attitude towards Ossovsky's exclusion from the Party let onitical attitude towards Ossovsky's exclusion from the Party let onitical attitude towards Ossovsky's exclusion from the Party let onitical attitude towards Ossovsky's exclusion from the Party let onitical attitude towards Ossovsky's exclusion from the Party let onitical attitude to ossovsky by the each judge for himself. Can this defence of Ossovsky by the each judge for himself of the present Opposition which led it to the inevitable logic of the present Opposition which led it to the inevitable logic of the present Opposition which led it to the inevitable logic of the present Opposition which led it to the inevitable logic of the present Opposition which led it to the inevitable logic of the present Opposition which led it to the inevitable logic of the present Opposition which led it to the inevitable logic of the present Opposition which led it to the inevitable logic of the present Opposition which led it to the inevitable logic of the present Opposition which led it to the inevitable logic of the present Opposition which led it to the inevitable logic of the present Opposition which led it to the inevitable logic of the present Opposition which led it to the inevitable logic of the present Op

On the contrary the Party must and does combat these defects. In circumstances in which there is an increase of activity in all social strata, in which all mass organisations are experiencing a revival, the Party must exert the maximum of activity. The consistent development of democracy within the Party, the new methods of leadership with regard to mass organisations, require that the Party should use every effort to linearity its work of that the Party Shound also every enough activities to remove to defects and bureaucratic abarrations of the internal regime of the Party. The first duty of our party in the present period is to revive the whole artivity of the Party, in combination of course with a campaign against the attempts to split up our Party into fractions and groups its it; then necessary for ithis pupose to make a "revolution in the Party" or can we not work with systematic thoroughness towards improving our practical methods of work and our Party leadership, whilst maintaining our from proving discipline? The answer too this question must be perfectly clear and indisputable to every Bolshevist Only those Opposition groups which have idetached themselves intom the workers and groups which have idetached themselves from the workers and from the Party can repeat the old Menshevist ideas about a "revolution in the Party" in a new deey. Only those bankrupt Party leaders who have lost all touch with the Party and with the mass of workers altogether, for whom the atmosphere of the serviced manes of advancing Bolshevism has become too close console themselves with the slogan that a "nevolution" is necessary in the interenal regime of the Party of the Party in the interenal regime of the Party of the Party in the interenal regime of the Party of the Party in the interenal regime of the Party of the Party in the party in the interenal regime of the Party of the Party in the part

Only persons who are quite out of sympathy with the Party fail to notice that the objective political significance of that clamour about the internal regime of the Party reacties for beyond the limits of internal Party questions. Their conspiracy against the foundations of the Bolshevist regime of the Party may acquire a general political significance hostile to the Party. We are well aware of the house which are notice animating the White Press a general positical significance hostile to the Party: We are well aware of the hopes which are now animating the White Press and especially the loreign Mensheviki that the light of the Opposition Block may still bean discount democratic fruit and that this light may be a valuable means of undermining the dictatorship of the proletariat. The deverest of our enemies are ready to support any form of fight which the Opposition may carry of against the "regime", even though at first if is footy" within the Party; for they perfectly well understand that the internal regime of the Party is closely limed with the general political conditions and with the very existence of the proletanian de-tator ship. These very clever enemies of Bolshevism rub their bands with joy and openly express their clation over every ad of the Opposition of hey do not trouble their heads about the positive programme of our Opposition within the Party. They say, not without justification, that the objective significance of say, not without justification, that the objective significance of an unbridged fight against the Party's regime will automatically bring with it the danger of the overthrow of the projectarial dictatorship. Can the light of the Opposition if it continue to develop immeruping the "dictatonial regime" in Russia six the White Guardists, and their answer is: Yes, it can and for six this reason we shall rejoice if the light of the Opposition is successful, if the Opposition is deterred by nothing in its struggle to introduce changes into the internal regime of the Party.

Can they not understand what is the inevitable objective significance of the light for a "revolutionary" transformation of the internal regime of the Party, looked at from the point of view of the social conditions in our country? Will not the bloated bourgeoisie and profiteers in the town will not the Kulaks in the village adopt this slogan, each in his own way?

We know that there is, in our country, side by side with an increase of the economic power of the socialist elements for the time being a certain strengthening of the bourgeois elements as well. We know that now, towards the end of the sixth "Nep? year, both the Kulaks and the bourgeois elements have been able to regain ground economically though only in a limited measure. And we know also how heav? is the pressure exercised by the proletarian dictatorship through this political power on these remains of the bourgeoisile in our State. We must realise that, under the pressure of the proletarian dictatorship, it is not the bourgeois elements which cheristrathe most extravagant dreams as to at change of political regime in the country. The Soviet dictatorship is so powerful and develops its positions in such an obvious way that the bourgeois elements in our country can only indulge in visions of a change of regime in some remote corner of social life.

The subdued struggle of these elements may however break out at some quite anexpected place, cloaked in hypocritical phrases and personal factors. If only needs some crooked path to be taken by a lew grouns or at any rate by a lew factors of social life to encourage the bourgeois elements to give vent to these leelings suppressed by the dictatorship. Whatever this path may be, it will find concrete expression in some kind of protest against the internal regime of our Party is under the present circumstances to a certain extent an objective expression of the influence of social strata foreign to our Party ou some of the elements within the Party, the influence of those strata which are now under the heel of the regime of the fight for freewolution, even though it be only within the negime of the Party. We must look for the social roots of these demands somewhere outside the proletariat, there within the regime of the Party. We must look for the social roots of these demands somewhere outside the proletariat, there where this question (that of the "regime"), is a vital question of the self-defence of a class. No Marxistano begins can deny that, in present circumstances the slogan of a revolution within the Party but in general politics had an in the internal politics of the Party but in general politics had all no live at social contents.

The Mensheviki love to cling to the coat tails of the Opposi-tion Block. For the benefit of the Opposition Block they are prepared actually to distort the truth. Quite recently a docu-ment fell into my hands which bears the name "Labour Question" and which has a pronouncedly Menshevist character: Among other things it states that in our factories and works the "arbitrary rule of the administration" has been restored, that in the Soviet Union a "united front of the institutions of the Party, the trade unions and the Soviets" is being formed against the workers. Can there be any doubt that this is a 1 Menshevist document? On the other hand the coments of this document are in some places an actual misrepresentation of the general tenor, of the present united Opposition. It is therefore no coincidence that some comrades have regarded his document as being spread by the Opposition, it is no mere coincidence that at the present time many persons cannot distinguish the documents of the Opposition from the misicous fiterary writings of our opponents. The Opposition Block gathers round the demand for a "revolution of the internal regime of the Party," Our Party, must however regard disbelled in the building up of socialism in our country, disbelled in the forces of the proletarial as the ideological basis of this Block. This disbelled is nothing more nor less than the growth of nothing regime in our Party, which is already munificating itself. Nowadays this often becomes particularly evident in the question which is answered by the chief resolution of the 14th Party Congress, in the question of the construction of socialism in our own country. It now transpires that this idea is mocked and jeered at by the most prominent leaders of the Opposition. Thus in one district. This inckery, however is nothing but a reflection of a breath of magadism which is becoming on a socialism in our own country. It now transpires that this idea is mocked and jeered at by the most prominent leaders of the Opposition. Thus in one district. This inckery, however is nothing but a reflection of a breath of magadism which is becoming to country it now the party to the party of the proposition of the opposition of the opposition of the opposition of the proposition of the opposition of t and which has a pronouncedly Menshevist character. Among other things it states that in our factories and works the "arbitrary has the invective of renegadism to do with genuine Liminisms.

We must clear up the question as to why Party functionaries of repute, recently even the leaders of the Party, subjected them. selves to ideas which are so alien to the Party, which lead to a direct denial of Leninism. How can this attack which is becoming more and more intense be explained?— an attack of the Party, organised by some comrades who until recently were I think that many of these facts would become clearer through a closer squaintance with the history of the Party especially in the period 1912-1914. Even in the past, the struggle of the the period twiz-twia. Even in the past, the struggle of the proletariat for its liberation has gone through a number of ups and downs. And every time that the proletarian light has been animated by a tresh impulse (as is now the case with socialist construction under the leadership of the proletarian), whilst there has been a fresh afflux of proletarian strata to the fight some tender on other, some group or other has remained aloof has not been carried forward to the full height of the flood tide. Persons who, by their forigin, belonged to petty bourgeois circles, to the circles of the petty bourgeois finelligents in have been particularly prone to succumb to this tendency. We know for instance that in the period of the October insurrection, in the period of an enormous wave of enthusiasm attong the proletarian masses, such eminent representatives of the Party as Comrades Zinoviev and Kameney could not keep the pace and were infected by the boastful pessimism with which the proletarian dictatorship was received. Writing afficies and making speeches is by no means sufficient to make one a consistent and enduring revolutionary. A genuine proletarian lighter must be well tempered in the fire of the real light, in and unaking speeches is by no means sufficient to make one a consistent and enduring revolutionary. A gentine proletarian lighter must be well tempered in the lire of the real light, in the lire of revolutionary work.

If we consider the chief group of the present leaders of the Opposition Block, those who strike us most are its most promount genesentatives. Trotzky, Zinoviev, Bistakov, Kemenev, Radek etc. The group of leaders of the present opposition compares of these gersons. There are amongst them many infended compares, some especially, who understand how to wield a pen and to charm with their tongues. While recognising all the good qualities of these compares, we must ascertishess point out one very deep reaching defect, it is not hear fash so much as their misforme, that he majority of the leaders of the present Opposition did not pass through the school of direct practical work in their Party organisations working in Russia during the hardest years of the pre-volutionary ingite that for years and years they look part in the literary and Party, partismentarian fights, but could not share in the battles of the actual revolutionary light in the period preceding the revolution. The most distinguished leaders of the Opposition, like many other simelifectual members of the Party, spert many years in emigration, separated from the working class of our country and deprived of the locisibility of taking part in the practical work of building up of the Party in the most difficult pre-revolutionary lights. And wice versal If we turn our attention to the present of the building up of the Party in the most difficult pre-revolutionary lights. And wice versal life we turn our attention to the present of the building up of the Party in the most difficult pre-revolutionary lights. And wice versal life we turn our attention to the present of the building up of the Party in the most difficult pre-revolutionary lights. And wice versal life the present of the present of the party in the solution of the light of the present clearing up of certain questions was of positive benefit to the Panty. We must once again emphasise the necessity of increased interest in the history of the Party, the Party's past, especially as concerns the period 1912-14.

The second conclusion concerns the significance of practical Part work and direct participation in the revolutionary light, for every Bolshevik, for every proletarian revolutionary. The experience of the Party shows that just those Communists, who spring from intellectual circles, should take this doctrine to heart. Lenin may be taken as an example of a leader of the proletariat, to whom, with all his enormous theoretical work, no practical Party work was unfamiliar. The Party knows that Lenin was not only a Party theorist who can never be replaced, not only a connoisseur of Party practice but also an active participant in the actual revolutionary fight.

We base our attitude to the Opposition on the resolutions which have already been passed by the Party. Much of course depends on how the Opposition behaves in the future towards these resolutions. The Party is faced by the difficult task of the construction of socialism, and unity and determination to carry through these tasks are more necessary than ever. One thing is beyond doubt, the resolutions passed by the Party must absolutely be carried through, without threserve", without sabotage. We must demand of every Party member, including every comrade who is now taking a leading part in the Opposition Block, that he should fulfil so elementary a condition: - Do not hinder the work, of construction, do not interfere with our work, do not, force on us unnecessary discussions in opposition to the resolutions of the Party!

Events in the past two years that the leaders of the Opposition, even when they are C. C. menters, transgress these elementary conditions of Party discipline. Thus, only yesterday an attempt was made at the meeting of the mucleus in the "Avidpribor" factory to infringe the Party resolution against discussion. A whole organised group appeared at this meeting, it is leaders of the present Opposition Block. On this occasion, Comrades Trotzky, Zinoviev, Piatricov and Radek exercised the severest criticism of the Party resolutions, of the line taken by the Party. The Communist workers of the nucleus gave them a decided repulse. Six leaders of the Opposition with their tollowers tried to overwhelm a workers' nucleus and met with an instructive and pitiful defeat.

The fact, however, exists that the Opposition leaders, seized by a fever of discussion, attacked the Party resolutions. Comrade Trotzky, a member of the Polit-Burgau, members of the C. C. such as Comrades Zinoviev and Piatakow, openly take up the light against the resolutions of the C. C. and the C. C. C. Can such a condition be tolerated in a Party which is strong through its Bolshevist traditions? Can anyone doubt that the C. C. and our whole Party demands unreserved observation of Party discipline and will say to all who defy Party resolutions: hevist discipline does not exist for the workers, for the simple members of the Party only, but also for conceited leaders, whatever high posts they may fill. Whatever may be the merits and talents of individual comrades who may attempt no one in our Party will succeed in undermining the iron discipline of the Lennist Party, and there can be no doubt that the Moscow organisations, in which the leaders and subleaders of the Opposition have now made the attempt to break loose in the Party meetings, will be the first to aim, with its own force, a destructive blow at every attempt to infringe Party

We must also devote attention to the following phenomenon. In recent times, individual leaders of the Opposition Block have thrown themselves head over ears into the business of the fractions, although in most cases, they have been entrusted with responsible work in some one of the State institutions. It is therefore easy to understand that the Party follows with special attention every step taken by the Opposition which might have a disjutegrating effect on the work of the Party apparatus, which, as it is, is inclined to lag here and there. The Party must declare with all decision that everyone who is entrusted with responsible work for the State, whatever high post he may fill, is responsible in every respect to the Party and to the leading bodies of the Party. In a moment such as the present, the Party must insist with increased vigour on its rôle as leader of the apparatus of Stale. In this question the Party can admit of no uncertainty. He who openly goes so far as to attempt the disruption of the Party resolutions, creates a danger of dis-organising, the whole work, he exhibits his disincination to obey, and his incapability of carrying out the instructions of the

To the unwillingness and decapability of some leaders of the Opposition to concern themselves with the practical daily tack and honestly to carry out the directions of the Party concerning the work of the apparatus of State, the Party can only give one answer: The work of training the young generation of the Party, the new proletariant carries of the Party for these tasks must be increased, the help of new functionaries must be enlisted. During the years of the revolution, the working class provided thousands and thousands of timetionaries for all branches of practical construction, for the most important leading posts. None of us can doubt that we can find in the working class and in the troops of the new proletarian intelligents. which is growing up, as many recruits to carry out the increasing tasks of the proletarian revolution.

There remains one other question: Is it not possible that the Opposition may introduce disintegration into the work of the Party? Are we not yet faced by the danger of a split in the Party? We heard a threat to this effect at the 14th Party Congress and yelled hints at the Party Congress in Stockholm. Up to recent times these threats on the part of the tractionaries who have gone mad by the congress of the part of the tractionaries who have gone mad by the congress of the part of the tractionaries. Up to recent times these threats on the part of the fractionaries who have gone much have not come to an end. To this the Party has only one answer. The Party is and will be able to repulse referitlessly, and with annihilating effect every attempt on the part of individual compades to force on the Party their own will as opposed to the will of the whole Party, even if the attempt is accompanied by a threat to split up the Party.

The Party has expressed its point of view and its will clearly enough. The discussion of the results of the July plenum of the G. C. and the C. C. C. has breshly steeled the unanimity of the Party in all local organisations, the overwhelming majority of the Party members has declared itself decidedly in favour of the cesolutions passed by the leading organs and for severe condemnation of the opposition dutis now absolutely necessary that a limit be put to the attempts of the Opposition to force its will on the Party and to disorganise the work, his as the Party formerly grew and increased in strength under Lenin's leadership it will now in spite of the pitful vacillations of the unasked "sayours" of the Party advance with firm and confident steps under the leadership of its Central Commune. This situation is closely bound up with the rotal conflict in England, the continumber of which has both weakened England's international polopment, while the new developments abroad now give fresh grounds of hope for the English miners in the continuance of their struggle

In his speech to the Conservative Conference at Scarborough

In his speech to the Conservative Conference at Scarborough on October Jith, the Prime Minister Baldwin claimed the entry of Cermany into the League of Nations and the linal ratification of Locarno as a signal information of British diplomacy. The claim may have satisfied his followers (in so lar as they had any attention to spare from their projects of corporal punishment for strikers), but he himself must have known well enough that it is a singularly out of date boast in relation to the actual position controlling his Government in Europe to day. England's position in Europe stood at its highest point since the war. The Conservative Government was temporarily secure at home by the device of the coal subsidy. France was weakned, not only financially, but also by the ruinous wars in Morrocco and Syria; Germany in the first stages of Dawes was ready to accept without question English tutelage in order to be taken back into the circle of Powers; and finally America was back into the circle o (Powers; and finally to America was favourable to a political settlement to saleguard its investments in Europe, with England as bailiff. Thus the way seemed clear for the organisation of English hegemony in Europe by the deleating of the French scheme of the Protocol, and the adoption of the Locarno Pact, which brought Germany back as a nominal equal and on this basis the building of the West European block under English leadership for the offensive against the Soviet Union. During 1926, however, now forces have developed which are historically to the English Locarno line. On the one hand, England has been weakened internationally by the unparalleled internal struggle, involving heavy economic loss and the concentration of attention at home. On the other hand, German in the second stage of reconstruction and with the aid of American loans, has emerged more and more as a distinct factor in Europe. pushing towards its own policy of economic expansion and conquest of markets, domination of Central Europe, revision of Versailles, recovery of colonies etc. The so-called "New German Imperialism". At the same time France, while in a sharper crisis than ever financially, has been able to exercise political pressure through control of vantage points in the machinery of the League, and has begun to see a new line of economic and political saland has begun to see a new line of economic and political salvation in union with Germany Finally, American jealousy of excessive English control in Europe has been manifested, not only in the open encouragement and assistance to Germany, but even more significantly in the veto of Brazil at the March Assembly of the League, which defeated the English plans for six months and was openly attributed in the leading English press to American influence.

The first revelation of the breakdown of Locarno took place The first revelation of the breakdown of Locarno took place in the base of the March Assembly of the League, when the various anagonisms prevented German entry as intended. This base was immediately followed by the full play of the new tonces, making for closer relations on the Continent of Europe as against the Locarno plan of Western European unity under England. In April came the German-Soviet Treaty of Berlin, an assertion of independence which attoused the unconcealed displeasure of England. The Franco-Soviet negotiations were already in process. The French-German economic negotiations, which had already been long developing received a powerful impetus By June the ioint committee of French-German trade agreement was signed; by September the Steel Pact was ready, and the political approach of Thoiry could take place.

Thus when the final entry of Germany into the League took place in September, a completely new situation, had developed place in September, a completely new situation had developed which entirely transformed as meaning from that contemplated originally by England, it is true that the Foreign Office during the six months had succeeded in gathering together some of the pieces broken in March, and in particular by the Pilsudaki coup in Poland had secured control there, made possible the German-Polish agreement and thus secured the success of the Cecil for mula for the League Council and the common entry of Germany and Poland. But the first and basic part of the League as a make weight to France in order to establish English influence in Europe, which was the condition of effective success of the anti-Soviet programme, completely miscarried: for Germany, after long resistance to English pressure to enter the League in finally took up the policy on its own behalf, and entered, not as England's client, but in union with France; so that the actual entry of Germany into the League in September became the occasion. not of England's triumph in Europe, but of the public demonstration of French German union at Thoury and the isolation of England in the League. England had to encounter open defeat in the League Assembly, as in the latture of the Cecil motion for the restriction of the scope of the League, and in the elections to the Council (defeat of the English candidate, Persia; election of China).

of China.

The anxiety and alarm of English bourgeons opinion at the projects and prospects of French-Derman economic amion, has been strong and unconcealed. Already in August the diplomat writing under the name of "August in the "Formightly Review followed up a series of previous warnings by an alarmist article. on the prospect of French-German union embracing in its score also Austria, Grecho-Slovakia and possibly Hungary.

sing the prospect of a whole serious of French German combines in isteel, coal, potashi and chemicals, isses in it an inexitable challenge to English and American influence once the process is de Piatibilita

The attempts of England to reply to this new prospect are likely to follow several paths. The first attempt is the alliance with Italy: Leghorn as the immediate reply to Thoiry. The close working of Chamberlain and Mussolini goes back to the of Locarno; the Rappallo Treaty of last December, with its secret clauses, secured attalian aid against Turkey over Mosul; in return thaly ineceived the partition of Abyasima; the Halo-Egyptian Treaty, forced on Egypt, gave Italy the desired entension in Jubaland; the dtalian debt was cettled with a cancellation los six sevenths; smathe Chinese crisis Haly has promptly declared for armed intervention with England. The Legions conversations were evidently intended to extend Anglo-Italian co-operation beyond the questions of the Middle Eastmand Africa as its primary sphere to the whole balance of European notities. and to comploit thato-french antagonism for a price which as in the case of Rappallo and the aid over Mosul, may only subsequently ibe disclosed and amounts of the nucley the state But the danglo-Italian blocks the treply thou the French-German bloc while significant of this complete reversion to prowar types of diplomatic groupings and the destruction of the no. so-called "spirit of Locarno", is not necessarily the stable basis of the period that is now opening, or the sole line of English policy. It is a measure of the weakening of England at the present moment and the crumbling of the Locanno policy, that England has fo lock to realy as principal partner in Europe. But the attempt will certainly be used at the same time to break into the French Centural bloc by separate approaches to France and to Cerman, Jack meeting of English and Cerman business men at Romsey, on the convocation of the English Covernment, and comprising the most influencial industrial, banking and and countries are according to the countries of the contract of the contract of the countries of the contract of the cont in the export field is inevitable, as the rapid expansion of exports a essential to both countries. The sole of the United States in relation to the new situation will eventually be of decisive importance. Stresgnann's wooling of American havour for the new combination has been open; but its reception does not so tar seem to have been warm.

American policy is likely to be no more tayourable to a too powerful Continental bloc than to a preponderating Inglish influence in Europe, unless America can be sure of a dominating influence in the bloc. For this reason England will undoubtedly look to American aid to exert pressure on France and Germany and to have the bloc But Artistics in playing the reality of the Balance of Bower in Europe as skilling as lingland did in the last century; and therefore English hopes of help can never practically the wholetmebiliness moonaid cost ed

In this situation the prolongation of the coal conflict, wholly unexpected to the Government who had counted on a complete oliapse of the Maners' Federation and proclaimed their terms accordingly, comes as an extremely difficult, and paralysing factor. approchement between France and Germany has had a painful effect upon those Polish circles who are seeking to make Poland a great Power. There is not the least doubt that France for the sake of "friendship" with Germany, will not shrink from sacrificing territory granted to Poland by the Treaty of Versatiles! At the same time it is also quite clear that the Treaty of Neutrality between the Soviet Union and Litruania can in no way be regarded as a success for Polish policy.

It is not, of course, a question of "plans of attack" on the part of the Soviet Union, in which Soviet diplomacy wishes to involve Lithuania. All that of course is nonsense. But there is not the least doubt that the Treaty between the Soviet Union and Lithuania has made a wide breach in the plans of Polish militarism which aimed at creating a bloc of the Baltic States dipotted against the Soviet Union in this sense the policy of Polsudski's ministers, which was dictated by London, has sustained a severe defeat, and the sense of the sustained a severe defeat, and the sense of the sense of the sustained a severe defeat, and the sense of the sense of

Under these dircumstances Plisudski had to accept the continued existence of the Sejm as being a lesser evil than new elections. There are several countries in Europe in which parliament exists side by side with an actual military dictatorship. In order to consolidate such a state of affairs in Poland, Plisudski, insofar as he cannot manage without parliament, must find a common language with the parties forming the parliamentary majority. In this respect Plisudski will, to some extent gain support in the broad demagogic agitation being carted on regarding Poland being threatened by a danger from the East. In this event Prisudski, should the Right Parties which are not inclined to mititary adventures prove to be irreconcitable to the belificose demagogy, has a means in store in order to render them more pliable. This means is an electoral reform which would deprive the masses of the people and the national minorities of the franchise.

Should such a "reform" be carried out, one could without fear diesolve the Seim and call a general election. In this campaign against the working masses it is probable that the Polish hoursecisie will gladly rally round Pilsidski, for it is hardly to be expected that such an attempt will not meet with strenous resistance from below.

UNION OF SOVIET REPUBLICS.

Questions of the Foreign Trade Monopoly of the Soviet Union.

By A. L. Mikojan.

The following article is an extract from an interview which the People's Commissar for Trade of the U.S.S.R. Commade Mikoyan, gave to representatives of the Soviet Press, Ed.

The Foreign Trade Monopoly in the Soviet Union Remains

Just recently the foreign Press has been devoting much attention to the economic life of the Soviet Union. For instance, very many rumburs have been constantly spread concerning alleged preparations for an alteration in the system of foreign thate monopoly. These rumours go as far as to assert that the Supreme Economic Council contemplates the abolition of the foreign trade monopoly.

It cannot be stated most categorically that all rumours concerning an alleged abolition of the foreign trade monopoly, or even a modification or alteration of the foreign trade monopoly are pure inventions.

The foreign trade monomody is an important instrument for exploiting all the jectimical possibilities of pruduction of the capitalist countries in a more advanced state of development, in the interests of expediting the Socialistic development of our mational economy and of the execution of the next economic materials of the Socialist structure, against country and the defence of the Socialist structure, against Capitalism.

The foreign trade monopoly is one of the most important bases of the conounic system of the Soviet Union, and consequently the Soviet Obvernment cannot under any circumstances permit its abolition or modification. On the contrary, in the future, too, it will take energetic measures in the direction of securing the extension and the solidity of the foreign trade monopoly. It is quite superfluous to disprove the indicators statements of the foreign Press to the effect that the Supreme Economic Council advocates the abolition of the foreign trade monopoly and that in this negard differences of opinion cast monopoly and that in this negard differences of opinion cast monopoly. The Supreme Economic Council. The Supreme Economic Council tavours without reservations, just as the whole of the Soviet Government does, the maintaining of the foreign trade monopoly.

The Growth of the Foreign Trade of the Soviet Union.

The foreign commercial traffic of the Soviet Union grows from year to year. The total turnover of foreign trade in the economic year 1922/23 amounted to 398 million roubles, in the following year, 1923/24, 962 millions, in the year 1924/25 1,288 millions and in the economic year which is now coming to a close it amounts to about 1,300 millions, or about our times the volume of the turnover of three years ago.

If regard is paid to the figures for exports alone, a stupendous growth is observable: In the year 1922/23 exports amounted to 201 million roubles, 1923/24 to 523 millions, 1924/25 to 568 millions and 1925/26 670 millions. The corresponding import figures are: 187, 439, 720 and 730 to 750 million roubles.

we are by no means satisfied with the results of our foreign trade, and we regard the further development of our foreign trade as one of the most important tasks of our Commissaria. The immense natural wealth of our country open to us unlimited possibilities for the development of our export trade; the growth of our domestic market's ability to absorb goods, our population's growing spending power, as also the keen demand for goods are further factors tending to promote the development of commercial relations with other European States and these of America

The Difference between the Export Trade of the Soviet Union to Lib Dus and Russian Export Trade Before the War?

The fact that practically the whole of the national economy of the Soviet Union has calready reached preswantlevel, while in the sphere of foreign trade we are greatly sindarrear of the pre-war standard, is often judged falsely. People are inclined to overlook two important facts, without consideration of which the mere contrasting of the surnover figures of foreign trade in pre-war sines with those of post-war times has no sense or significance. It would be false to assume that we are mechanically reconstructing ourse economy ton other basis of pre-war proportions. In the reconstructive process of our economy there are reflected all those changes which represent the effect of the historical transformations in the Soviet Union.

First of all, the fact is generally left out of account that the figures for foreign trade in pre-war times also covered the present border States. For this reason that part of the totals falling to the share of the border States should be deducted before comparison is anade.

In the second place, a simple comparison of the exponingures of pre-war times with those of to-day is loft no critical value, because the great revolutionary events in Russia, which have changed the economic and social system of the country, have necessarily also had effect upon this department of our conomy. It is a wellknown fact that the greater part of the exports of Czirist Russia were based not upon the disposal of arrivages, but upon underfeeding the masses of the people and an extraordinarily low standard of living among the workers and peasants in Russia, whereas one of the greatest achievements of the October Revolution lies in the fact that the standard of living of the workers and the labouring class of the village has been raised considerably. A portion of the products which lound its way abroad during cranist times is now being consumed by the labouring masses of our country, who thanks to the October Revolution, now enjoy much more normal conditions of life and better food.

The anginented domestic consumption finds its reflection most particularly; in: the comparative low export figures for butcher's meat, eggs, grain, setc. In these branches of the export trade we are includitable very far below the pre-war level, and a reaction from this circumstance is to be found in the narrowing of the limits of our import trade. From the standpoint of the interests of other working masses of our country this is, however, a great achievement, flor our task is by no means to reduce the consumption and the standard of diving of the workers and peasants in favour of exports, but to develop further the branches of industry, which are working for export, and we look forward to excellent results in this direction.

This removal of the past malnutrition of the masses of the people and this raising of the material and cultural state of the loilers is the best guidrantee for a rapid cultural and material development of our country.

In many other branches of economy, not immediately connected with consumption by the masses, we are able, on the other hand, to register an increase of exports as against prewar times. Our exports of naphta during the current year amount to 153% and our tobacco exports to 112% of the respective pre-war quantities.

In the approaching economic year 1926/27 we shall record a considerable chlargement of our turnover in foreign trade.

The Difficulties in the First Half of the Economic Year and their Solution.

During the current economic year, and especially during the first half of it, we had to face a number of difficulties. We, are now, however, well out the way to dispose of these difficulties, while a portion of them have already been disposed of, a fact which will be demonstrated during the next, few years of our loreign trade.

We made a big mistake in setting up a maximal export plan, which we could not put into practice. As we reckned upon pushing exports during the first three months of the economic year, we issued during this period 56% of the import licences projected in the plan for the year, and when at the beginning of the second quarter, it became evident that we could not carry through our export plan, it was already too late to bring imports into consonance with exports, because more than half of the importation plan for the whole year had been executed.

importation plan for the whole year had been executed.

The task of the Soviet Covernment during the second half-year was to mitigate the results of the negative phenomena of the first quarter, and we now know that our work during the second half-year proceeded much more normally, while a number of short-comings and lattures of the first half-year were duly compensated for We are therefore, resolved to avoid all such mistakes during the coming half-year and to proceed energetically with all the instructions of the Covernment, and especially those relating to gaining an export surplus for our balance of trade.

The Soviet Government Still Adheres to Revolutionary Working

The foreign Press also repeatedly places a talse significance upon the working methods of the Soviet Government. I believe that governments in other countries do not subject themselves to self-examination and criticism in regard to their own work as the Soviet Government relies upon such a measure of confidence from the masses of the awarkers and peasants that into does not try as governments in other countries do, to hide the short-countries and mistakes that occurrant gits work, all its only by means of such rutthessly critical self-examination that the Soviet Government is in a position to method the public opinion of the protectarian masses for the purpose of overcoming these mistakes and short-countries. The Soviet hower has consistently pointed out its own errors in order to purpose of overcoming these mistakes and short-countries to other purpose of the consistently pointed out its own errors in order to purpose of the consistently pointed out its own errors in order to purpose of the consistently pointed out its own errors in order to purpose of the consistently pointed out its own errors in order to purpose of the consistently pointed out the future to other mend to adhere to this truly revolutionary working method from

New Instructions for the Elections to the Soviets.

By A. Kurella (Moscow).

"Let the dogs and pigs of the dying bourgeoisie and of the petty bourgeois Democracy, which is perishing with, it, hard their curses, invective and soom at us for the mistakes and defects in the construction of our Soviet regime. We do not forget for a moment that there have been many mistakes and failures in our work and that they still occur. Let anyone try to manage without mistakes and failures in work which is so new, so absolutely new in the history of the world as is the construction of a type of State which has never before existed We shall endeavour unceasingly to correct our mistakes and failures in order to improve the practical application of our Soviet principles in real life, which is so tar by no means perfect. (Lenin!)

All the enemies of communism made a great fuss about the instructions issued last year for the elections to the Soviets which were said to be the abandonment of the dictatorship of the protetariant.

What had actually occurred? The 14th Party Conference had passed a number of resolutions providing certain alleviations for the employment of wage-earners and the development of small industry in the country. The object of these resolutions was to facilitate a more rapid increase of agricultural production and the absorption of the workers who atteam into the towns and otherwise go to swell the army of the unemployed. The Election Commission of the Central Executive Committee of the Soviet Union had thought it necessary to supplement these essential economic measures by political measures. These political measures consisted in the tranchise being granted to individual categories of the population who derived certain economic advantages from the resolutions of the 14th Party Conference. Thus for instance the tranchise was granted in last years instructions to all peasants and village artisans who employ one permanent worker or two apprentices (in so far as they themselves take part in the work).

This political "supplement" to the conomic resolutions of the 14th Party Conference was undoubtedly a mistake Although in practice last year's election instructions only effected a negligeable numerical change in the composition of the electorate (the persons newly admitted to the franchise only represented 3% of the total electorate), it was a great fundamental mistake to transfer in a mechanical way the concessions made to certain petty bourgeois elements in the economic field to the political one. As a matter of fact some of the regulations of the election instructions were contradictory to the jundamental terms of the Soviet Constitution with regard to the franchise, as was proved by the resolution of the lume plenum with regard to the elections.

by the resolution of the June plenum with regard to the elections. But by the Spring of this year the Party had already taken the first steps towards mending the mistakes it had made. It was, as a matter of fact, Comrade Stalin who, in March of the ourrent year, pointed out that the mistake made in the election instructions was indeed a Menshevist deviation and that the blunder made ought to be corrected as soon as possible. The July pleaum of the Central Committee of the C.P.S. U. then passed the well-known resolution with regard to changing the election instructions, and, on September 28th 1926 the chairman of the Central Executive Committee of the Soviet Union approved of new instructions for the elections to the Soviets. These instructions which were published in the divestile of October 1st, contain the following important points:

In the first place it corrects the chief mistake of last year's instructions by annulling any extension of the tranchise which is contradictory to the principles of the Constitution. It rein the first place it corrects the chief mistake of last year's instructions by annulling any extension of the franchise which is contradictory to the principles of the Constitution. It reestablishes the principle that the following are excluded from the tranchise: I, persons who have exploited or are now exploiting paid labour with a view to making profit; 2 persons who have lived or are living on unsamed monte or such as have been occupied or are occupied in frace; 3, persons who, in view of the class to which they belong at the time of the elections are declared to have forested the franchise in accordance with the paragraphs of the Constitution dealing with the subject.

Furthermore the instructions lay down that it is imperative that the representatives of the following organisations take part in election commissions: the trade unions, the leagues of youth, the women's serious, the Red army and the various organisations of the poor peasantry, such as relief funds, committees for relief of the village poor etc. These regulations with regard to the composition of the election construssions prevent the intrusion of alien elements in the election commissions.

A final amportant regulation of the new instructions is that the Central Executive Committee of the Soviet Republics can issue special supplementary instructions to these instructions, which take into consideration the peculiarities of the Republic in question. This refers above all to making concrete the determination of the electoral district in the parts of the country where the population is monadic, where the breeding of draught cattle predominates etc.

The issue of the instructions, which represent the carrying out of the resolutions of the Central Committee of the Party, is a further proof that the Party and with it the Soviet Government remains true to Lemn's teaching. Incidentally, mistakes may of course occur, "Let anyone try to manage without mistakes and failures in work, which is so new so absolutely new in the history of the world as is the construction of a type of State which has never before existed said Lenin in 1921. That mistakes are made is of no importance; what is important is that the Party is constantly on the watch to control and crificise its activities and to correct its mistakes in the Leninist spirit.

The resolution of the Council of the People's Commissa-The resolution of the Council of the People's Commissa-riat of the Soviet Union, dated September 21st, concerning the increase of wages for categories of workers in receipt of the lowest rate of pay, is a measure of very great significance, especially when it is taken into consideration that the advan-cing of wages during the whole time has not been interrupted and continues constantly li we regard the months of April to June of the economic year 1922/23 as representing 100, the ave-June of the economic year 1922/23 as representing 100, the average real wage in the whole of industry rose to 124 in the corresponding months of the economic year 1924/25, to 145 in April to June in the economic year 1924/25 and to 167 in the corresponding months of the economic year 1925/26, and therefore, rose altogether by 67%, during this period

This advance was achieved through a general increase of wages, on the one hand, and, on the other, by the introduction of piece-work for the skilled workers and of supplementary premiums for the labourers in view of the high piece-work wages, the increase of the wag s for skilled workers has exceeded the increase in the pay of the fabourers.

The growth of the wages of the skilled workers is adequately guaranteed by the system of piece rates, and will still be in the future, as the output of labour increases in consenquence of the fresh equipment of industry and the introduction of rational methods of organising work. This possibility, however, does not exist for unskilled and semi-skilled labourers working at so much per hour, and it is, therefore, necessary to bring their earnings more into accord with those of the skilled workers. This was, and still remains, a task of the labour mo-

A number of measures were adapted to this end : increase of wages for those in receipt of the lowest rates of pay under the collective contracts, increase of salaries of the lowest categories of employees, together with the execution of the standardisation of the salaries of civil servants, sudsidising of the local budgets for the purpose of increasing the pay of the low factory results, and it is offly now that the consolidated general economic situation affords the possibility of outfing through a number of measures in this direction in order to increase the wages of the low-paid workers. But even these measures must be effected without causing a strain to our currency and without entailing other undesirable economic consequences.

It is, therefore, necessary, in accordance with the resolution of the Council of People's Commissariats, dated September 21st, that we pay close attention during the year 1926/21 to the increasing of the wages, especially of the low-paid groups of workers in industry, transport, postcandi telegraph services, in consonance with their financial possibilities.

A faulty calculation in advancing wages would certainly provoke, aparti from financial difficulties for the industrial branches concerned; a number of difficulties in the goods market, for every increase of the purchasing powers of the population, net backed by a corresponding increase in the quantity of goods available, would lead to anweakening of the purchasing power of the rouble and consequently, and the real wageshof alloworkers. a choix to move in a

A badly planned advance of wages for the groups left at a disadvantage would not only injure the position of these groups but would also be detrimental to the whole of the working class. Therefore, an increase of wages can only be permitted to an extent of 100 for the low-paid groups of workers engaged in production, and then only in the following branches in which wages are depressed: coal mining, ore mining, individual branches of the metal industry, of the textile industry, and the chemical industry, the match industry, glass manufacture, china manufacture, and special production and finally; the railway post and telegraph services. All

The percentage of the advances and the distribution of the increases among the lowest ratings of workers will be fixed upon the revision of the collective contracts in the branches concerned when the period of validity of the old collective contracts has elapsed. If the date of the fresh conclusion of the collective contracts be postponed, the advance in wages will be calculated as from the moment of expiration of the old contracts. contracts

Parallel with the above-mentioned measures for increasing wages, as general freduction of the maintenance cost of the system of administration of the State and elionomic institutions and of the factories must be carried out it to mount

In industrial works there must also be taken; for the successful realisation of the proposed advancement of wages, decisive steps to compatuous of time among workers and to promote more effectual discipline Most earnest attention must be devoted to the task of raising the output of labour.

THE WHITE TERROR

To the Aid of the Bulgarian Comrades!

BY R. Charar ov (Mesons) than of

We are still continuing to hear pointed news of the shameful persecutions of the weirking people of Bulgaria. The Bulgarian hangmen, whose new chief, Liaptebell, in no way differs from his predecessor Zankov, do not the even a minute interroption in their work. This time it is the Young Communist League of Bulgaria which is attracting their special national.

In the course of the last year our Bulgarian Youth comrades had to record great success in their work. In spite of the savage persecutions, they have overcome the most moredible difficulties and again built up their Lesigne which was dissolved after the tascist coup d'état and particularly after the explosion in the Sofia Cathedral in April 1924. Our contrageous Bulgarian contrades, under the Zankoff regime, again set up a welf-ordered Young Communist organisation which has struck deep roots in the broad masses of the working and peasant yourn.

The Moung Communist League, which had no work under strictly illegal conditions, made, uself deld more and more in the political life of Bulgaria. The illegal organ of the League of Telegarians. "Tcherveno Smime" (The Red Flag), appeared regularly and was distributed to thousands of topics throughout the whole country Leafferst appeals and regulationary alogans of the Young Commissist were distributed wholestie in the lactories and workshops and in the towns and willages of Bulgarian Under the blackest right of treationary utolence of the facist dictatorship the voice of the revolutionary youth began to be heard louder and louder and became a summons to light which called upon the entire working class and the peasantry again to rally their the entire working class and the peasantry again to rally their

The government of gendarmes and hangmen (which bears the imposing name of "Democratic Union") got a severe shock

The burning indignation of the people threatened to break over them in all its violence. The tresh insurrectionary movements which flamed up among the peasants timally deprived them of their senses. After wreaking vengeance in the most insane and brutal manner on the peasants in the distnicts of Troian and lovetch where whole villages were wiped out and the whole district converted into one mass grave, the Liaptcheff government decided to destroy the Young Constitution League.

The government so arranged matters that they delivered their blow precisely on the International Youth Day which in this year, thanks to the preparations that have been made, threatened to take the form of a powerful demonstration against the regime of deceit and violence. A triumph of the International Youth Day precisely at this moment would, however, have been dangerous for the fascist rulers, as the municipal elections were to take place in October, at which the electors would settle accounts with them. On the other hand, they required suitable ideological "preconditions" which would allow them to secure the majority for the ruling clique. The government believed that by means of the campaign against other Young Communist League they would be able to create the inecessary atmosphere of terror against all their opponents which is so necessary to them.

The government were preparing for this attack for months. The whole gigantic police and spy apparatus was brought into motion, and the provocateurs, the spies and inquisiors worked teverishly and used every possible means in order to penetrate into the idlegal organisation of the Young Communist League.

And when it appeared to the government that sufficient preparations had been made and that there must be no further delay, the decisive blow was delivered pater and the

On the 4th September, the day immediately preceding the International Youth Day, mass arrests were carried out among the youth throughout the whole country. The exact number of those arrested cannot at present be ascertained, but at any rate it reaches imany hundreds (The gendamerie seized everybody, no matter whether he appeared suspicious or not and whether was or was not proved that he was a member of the Young Communist League. There is no doubt that these are not isolated cases. The bestial hangmen of the hugarian people are endeavouring to choice the awakening revolutionary youth movement in streams of tresh blood as any or tree?

Everything must therefore be done in order to prevent this come. The entire international proletariat must raise its powerful voice of protest in order to stay the arm of the executioners which is already raised to strike the Bulgarian bourgeoise and their hirelings must relatise that belind the persecuted, lighting youth of Bulgaria there stands the gigantic power of he working class of the whole world, which will not permit them to wreak fresh bloody vengeance some to ingreent ve

The Main Features of Development of Peasant Mutual Aid.

By A. Avdeyev.

The organisation of peasant mutual aid originated in the difficult years of famine in the Soviet Union. The decree legalising the inauguration of mutual aid committees (on the initiative of the peasants themselves) was signed by V. I. Lenin in 1921.

What were the real factors evoking this new social organisation in the countryside?

The plundering policy of the Czar's government in former Russia excluded every possibility of raising the economic level of the peasant farms. While a handful of landowners owned sometimes from 10-15 dessiatins of land and cultivated this land with perfective methods, with the aid of expensive foreign machinery, 22 million peasant farms for the tillage of their miserable plots owned only the most primitive agricultural implements and eked out a miserable existence.

The imperialist war tore away from the land the main cadre of agricultural workers and made the situation still worse. Then the blockade and civil war came. At that time the peasants with rifle in hand, together with the workers, defended the Soviets and were again torn away from their faints.

When the famine came all these causes were bound to have tatal results -- they greatly increased the difficulties in fighting the famine in the countryside, and caused extreme decrease in the defensive capacity of the starving middle and poor peasants against the kulak strata of the countryside

It was in these difficult conditions that the idea of peasant mutual aid societies was organisationally, formulated.

In order not to die of starvation during the famine years, in order not to fall once more into enslavement to the kulaks. in order to oust the speculators the peasants began spontaneously to organise peasant committees of mutual aid at the time the state distributed funds to the peasantry.

It is true, that at first in 1921-22 and even to a certain extent in 1923 the work of the peasant committees amounted merely to distributive functions, A village receiving a subsidy from the State elected a committee which was applied not only to distribute correctly the State loan received, but also to look for funds supplementary to this loan with the aid of social abour. According to the instructions of the committee, every citizen in the village had to work a certain number of hours gratis in order that the committee as a result of his labour, could render aid to the poor peasants and invalids of the villages, etc. Hence it is comprehensible that in the years of famine, peasant mutual aid served almost exclusively those sections which should have been under the jurisdiction of the social welfare organs for instance the families of red army men, war and labour invalids, widows, orphans, etc.

In order that the village work of the social welfare organs would not escape the control of the peasants themselves, the decree established that all aid to the countryside rendered by the State must pass through the peasant mutual aid committees. At the same time, in order to obtain greater coordination of work, the committees were attached to the social welfare organs.

The first period of organisational formulation of peasants mutual aid did not last long. Already commencing from 1923-24 peasant mutual aid adopted the path of a wide peasant organisation. The mutual aid committees, having in view in the main all the cadres of poor peasants, at the same time commenced to aid also the middle peasants who had fallen into need as a result of various spontaneous disasters fire, loss of cattle, etc.

Moreover, as material funds became strengthened, peasant min tual aid commenced rendering wide support to village cooperation. It paid the share contributions for the poorest peasants, organised all Kinds of labour artels for them, taught them collective labour in the sphere of agriculture, prepared more and more new cadres of peasants in agricultural collective famus, handicraft co-operatives and others organisations. In certain provinces, for instance, the organisation of village invalid artels was very successful. For the year 1925 alone, 869 of such artels were organised with 9,513 members.

The main occupation of the mutual aid committees was common tilling. In 1925, 192,351 dessiatins were occupied under common tillage.

alti is extremely important to note that the work in common tilling is to a large extent conducted under the supervision of agronomists with perfective methods and with the aid of machinery. The number of machines in the mutual aid societies steadily grows from year to year. In 1924 for instance, they had 113 tractors and in 1925 already 881 tractors. As for less elaborate machines, such as threshing machines, etc., there were tens of thousands of these.

Further, in order to get suitable corn of good quality for the given district, the mutual aid societies organised their own seed funds. In 1925 the seed fund of the peasant committees comprised 1,193,428 poods of various (cereals of at

This fund is distributed not only top social enterprises, belonging to the peasant mutual aid society, but also as seed loans to separate peasant darms both in cases of need of seeds in general, and also with the object of improving the crops

The growth of the small enterprises in the villages organised by the peasant committees mainly for improving agricultural products is remarkable. These include mills, butter factories, workshops for making agricultural instruments, etc. For instance, already on January 1, 1925, there were 3,794 such enterprises, and on January 1, 1926 there were already 7.032 All these efferprises are now exclusively owned by the village peasant mutual aid committees, although up to 1924 the uvest and gubernia organs also had a right to engage their productive activity. Out of a turnover of 7,5 million roub les, these enterprises yielded a net profit of 686,716 roubles during the last economic year. This assistance to the measures tradertaken by the Soviet State in the countryside is in particular valuable in that it comes from the self-activity of the peasants themselves and is directed into the same Socialist channel as the factory industry of the LLS S.R. 79200 P

If we take the entire accommic sactivity of these peasant mutual aid committees for the R.S. F.S.R. as at whole, we find that according to informaton from 65% of them, there is a floating capital of 22 million roubles.

Unfortunately this information is not complete as the lea ders of the committees are often illiterate and cannot give an substantial information as to their activity.

Aid to the needy is rendered in various forms: materia aid in the form of redeemable and unredeemable loans; labour vaid in the form of tilling the fields of poor peasants, collecting the harvests by social labour, etc., and finally juridical aid. In latter form of said is rendered by the committee, which keeps register of all poor peasants, giving them the right of defence it sends its representatives to all State institutions such for it stance as the Agricultural Tax Continuission, acts on behalf the peasants in Courts, and maintains permanent contact with the juridical office of the village reading rooms through which the peasants also receive the legal advice and information the Space will not permit us to refer in detail to the other pects of the many-sided activity of the peasant Mutual And cieties. But one may see the high degree of vitality of this ganisation if only from its continuous growth.

As a result of its five year's work; Peasant Mutual Aid now grown to 45,000 organisations with 7,5 million member The material basis of the societies is also growing the figures cited above bear eloquent testimony to this

There have been, however, no small number of errors and deviations in our work for instance as an overwieldly apparatus, self-consumption of resources, and detraction with ductive or trade activity. But the main obstacles are already behind us and the Peasant societies of Mutual Aid are now proceeding along the correct path, taking an active part in the work of Socialist construction in the countryside terris-

To what a degree the peasant Mutual Aid Societies have become a necessary organisation in the villages is clearly shown by the resolution of the XIII and XIV Congresses of the C.P.S.U. (b). The Party has allotted to the peasant committees a fairly responsible sector of work in the way of establishing the alliance with the middle peasants in the villages, and in the way of defending these strata from the enslaving terms of the kulak.

Nr. 67

In 1926 there took place the 4th Congress of the Peasant Mutual Aid Societies which horoughly elaborated the subsequent tasks of our organisations. In the main, the Congress marked out the following lines

a) Continue directing all the work of the Peasant Mutual Aid Societies along the channels of Socialist construction, linking this work closely with that of the social welfare organisations.

b) Liquidate the dependent psychology which has remained in certain places from the period of military Communism.

c) Intensity still more the self-activity of the masses, for which the entire work of the committees should be conducted, with the approval of the general meeting of members

d) Continue to increase the committee's attention to the poor peasants, invalida, namilies, pla Red-Army men and middle peasants who are in meed, with marked attention to the struggle against child destitution in the villages; take all possible steps for caring for homeless children in the villages.

e) Prepare new detachments of the unorganised population to be brought into the co-operatives collective farms. letc.

Thus in support of the main organisations in the country side - the Soviets and Co-operatives, there develops and grows stronger a third social organisation — Peasant Mutual Aid, based exclusively on the self-activity of the peasant masses.

Soviet White Russia.

White Russia is the former "North-Western Borderland" of the Czarist Empire, a land where in 1863 Muraviev "the hangman" operated, and where latterwards the policy of russification of the borderland was conducted! Even the miserable zemstwo which formerly existed in Russia was lacking here. Only fust before the war was a kind of semstwo granted to the Eastern provinces of White Russia. This is where the Jews had been artificially driven into the "pale", and were suppressed by the "provisional" regulations of 1882" in town and village; they were forbidden to take up agriculture in rural districts. The White Russian peasants engaged in agriculture on small narrow strips of land surrounded on all sides by large estates. The little towns and villages crowded with poor Jews were unable to absorb the surplus free labour power of the landless passants. The czanist authorities on the basis of the situation they had created endeavoured to incite the White Russian masses in the illages against the Jewish masses in the towns; they organised ewish pogroms.

Meanwhile they were Russitying this country. The village population spoke the White Russian language which was recognised as the jargon. Both these languages which served the majority of the White Russian countryside, country towns and cities were an object of persecution and ill treatment. In the same position were the Lithuanian, Polish and Lettish languages used the other national minorities of White Russia. The Russian language was grafted by force on everyone as was also the official Russian culture. There were no higher schools in White Russia. Nikolas I distinguished himself after the Polish rising of 1883 by punishing White Russia with the closing down of the Vilna University.

This country was in an extremely difficult position. Increased emigration in search of bread commenced. This emigration was caused both through general causes and also by the fact that the lowns of White Russia and Ukraine were artificially crowded thanks to the "pale" and the "provisional regulations of 1852".

Emigration proceeded to far Siberia and to still further America.

The imperialist war ruined this borderland still more. White

Russia became one of the cock-pits of the world war. Lines of tenches cut the land practically in half and from these trenches destruction and death was on both sides. The fields grew wild, the forests were chopped up for military purposes, villages and lowns were burned and the mounds of the graves of the cannon-fodder of the imperialist powers grew higher and higher. The wave of refugees swept out of White Russia, which had become a desert. Nearly a million inhabitants left the land. The poor peasants left on horses, all roads were choked with refugers wagons. The fields by the way-side were filled with the single or collective graves of the refugees who had fallen from disease. Even now one can follow the winding path of the refugees by these graves."

Such was the position of White Russia when the revolution of 1917 came. The revolution affected only the part that was on the Russian side of the front. The February Revolution merely raised those problems which the great October Revolution afterwards solved. In time the revolution came to White Russia, concentraine its forces in Minsk. White Russia began to revive; the workers and then the peasants began to build up a new life. But the triumph of October only lasted a hundred days. The Brest-Litovsk peace did not stay the imperialist hist of the German junkers. The German army moved forward in an offensive and by February 1918 almost the whole of White Russia was under German occupation. Increased exploitation commenced The landowners and factory owners driven out by October returned and redeemed their losses at the expense of the workers and peasants of White Russia. Only the German Revolution which commenced in autumn of 1918 liberated White Russia from the occupation. In December 1918 a workers and peasants government was organised in White Russia and on January 1st, 1919 the White Russian Soviet Socialist Republic was proclaimed. Great October victoriously moved further forward to the West. Soon the Soviet Republic was set up in Lithuania. Both Republics unite their forces and form a Lithuaniau-White Russian Soviet Republic. But the worker and deasant masses of Lithuania and White Russia cannot work at putting fino force file ideas of October for long. In the autumn of 1919 White Russia fell info the hands of Poland. The eleven months of Polish occupation was absolute torture for the country. Whereas the German occupants cripped the country very close, the Polish occupants absoutely bled it dry. Only in the summer of 1920 did the Red Army, ogether with the rebellious workers and peasants, liberate White Russia from the Polish White Guards. On August 1st 1920 Soviet White Russia was restored, comprising the Eastern part of ethnographical White Russia.

By the Riga Peace Treaty, the western half of White Russia remained in the hands of imperialist Potand Huawaits its October. The position of the working and peasant masses in western White Russia are indescribably difficult. Landowners' Poland is conducting a policy of violence and unceremonious plunder. This part of Poland is experiencing a tense life and is like a gunpowder magazine ready to go off.

Soviet White Russia is experiencing a different life. Here the workers and peasants are building a new life. The land which has been ruined by war and various occupations is being built up again. The ruin is so great that many branches of production have had to be started right from the beginning on bare founda-

Soviet White Russia occupies a territory of 110,000 square kilometres (in the former Minsk, Mogilevsk and Vitebsk provinces). The authorities have already succeeded in dividing it into districts on the basis of economics, number of popula tion, climate, etc.; it is composed of ten regions, 100 districts and 1,202 village soviets. The division into districts has considerably aided the normal development of the economy of this borderland and the restoration of the economic position.

The population of White Russia according to the calculation of August 1, 1925 comprised 4,254,000 people. The increase of population during the last few years in connection with the restoration of economy is greater than pre-war. Before the war the increase of population was 18-20 per thousand, while during the last few years the growth of the population has been 23-24 per thousand. On the basis of this one can estimate the present figure of the population of White Russia at about 4,350,000 people. The population of White Russia is composed of various nationalities. In percentage proportions it is composed as follows: White Russians 70,7%, Great Russians and Ukrainians — 15,5%, Jews — 11%, Poles — 2,1%, and others 0,7%. All these, except the Great Russians are former oppressed nationalities, who after the February Revolution were released from national oppression. The Soviet constitution ensures normal traternal relations between the follers of various nations. The languages of all nationalities populating White Russia are recognised with equal rights; the main language is White Russian, as it is most widely diffused. The majority of institutions in the republic have already adopted the White Russian language, commencing with institutions closely connected with the White Russian countryside But in these institutions communications with the population of White Russia of various nationalities is also ensured in all the local languages. In those places where a national minority in White Russia lives in a compact mass and comprises the majo rity of the population, national village soviets are organised These are gradually being set up and there are now 22 of friend in White Russia. In these national village Soviets, the chief lan guage is the language of the particular national minority. One of the chief measures in the national question is the liquidation of the consequences of the czarist policy towards the Jewish masses who were artificially kept off the land. The Government of White Russia has been the first to adopt the policy of afforting land to the Jews. The growing desire of the Jewish poor for land is being satisfied. By January 1925 there were 79 collective tarms organised and 7 settlements of lewish agriculturalists Altogether 10,000 dessiatins trave been distributed. The work in this direction has only commenced, but the results are tremen

The economics of the country are being restored. The pea sants who have received the land of the banished landowners (1,327,271 dessiatins) have settled down to free labour. The pro ductivity per dessiatin has increased during the last three years and remains higher than the pre-war Agricultural machinery has been set going and the adoption of grass crops and the introduction of the crop rotation system has become a feature in the peasant farm, Bog lands are gradually being drained. During the budget year 1924 +25 alone, 31,553 heptares of marshes were drained. Cattle breeding which was destroyed during the previous years of war and occupation is now being energetically restored. It has already reached the figure of prewar development

Industry is also developing despite the enormous damage suffered during the preceding years. During the war and occupation entire lactories and works were removed to the depths of Russia or destroyed during the military activities. Certain forms of industry have had to be constructed all over again premises have had to be built and repaired, machinery ordered equipment installed and special lists secured. Now there is an extensive development of those forms of industry which are connected with agriculture, cattle-breeding and forestry. At the present time the production of industry in White Russia is 65% of pre-war. The number of enterprises by October 1925, increased to 202 while the number of workers engaged rose to 17,026. The majority of enterprises are in the hands of the State. Out of 17,026 workers, 14,541 work in State enterprises. The handicraft industry is also developing. There are 15,000 people engaged in it in towns and villages, Cooperation which was practically unknown in White Russia under czarist Russia is develog ig the towns, and is now beginning to penetrate into the remotes corners of the countryside, By October 1, 1925 here were 546 consumers cooperative unions with 224,575 have holders and 404 agricultural coop unions with 5,000 have holders. Besides this handicraft, industry, housing and hald cooperative also began to spring up. The cooperatives get state

In respect to culture, Whate Russia has grown almost beyond recognition. This border land, which under czarism dil no have a single higher school, now has a State university, a Communist university, an agricultural academy and veterinary institute, etc. The university has a Jewish section. The agricultura academy provides for the training of students in connecting with allotting land to toiling Jews. A supreme scientific-cultura institution—the Institute of White Russian Culture has grown up out of nothing it is beginning to be formed into an academy of sciences. Attached to the Institute of White Russian culture is a network of investigation organisations which embrace all districts of White Russian and study the life of all national minorities of the country. The interests of the national minorities are ensured in the institute by the existence and work of the lewish and Polish departments. Beginning this winter a i ettist department will be organised Before the October Revolution there was absolutely no vocational training in White Russia but during the past lew years it has developed extensively there are 24 technical colleges and 23 trade schools. Particular attention is devoted to the training of teaching and agronomical statis. Teachers are trained for work both in White Russian schools and also in the schools of the national minorities. Schools for social training are organised on the basis of the labour prin ciple and serve the many nations inhabiting the country in the native language of the children. The children's homes and kinder gartens are organised on the same basis. There are 237 seven year schools in White Russia, 4,042 four, year schools and issue stations for liquidating difference Year by year the network schools increases and at the same time the cultural demands the toiling masses also increasen is

That his howethe Republiquoto Soviets of White Ru daughter of October, is living and developing. Every year brings more and more accomplishments. The Union of Socialist Soviet Republics renders constant support in the economic and cultural work of the Young Republic And on the other side of the cordon, under the chains of imperialist Poland, western White Russia is languishing. Nevertheless, the workers and peasants of both White Russias live in the hope of unification within the frontiers of the U. S. S. R. The great liberator of the oppressed - October - will come eventually, also for western White Russia fettered in the chains of Polish imperialism
